VOL. XVIII.....NO. 5537. NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1869. PRICE FOUR CENTS.

THE LATE HENRY J. RAYMOND.

Last Honors to the Lamented Dead.

Funeral Services at the House and at the Church.

Certainly no funeral of any man, not occupying an official position, and not connected with any military or civic society, or any other body which felt bound to be present as a mere duty of ceremony, was ever more largely attended than that of the lamented HENRY J. RAYMOND, the editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES, which took place yesterday afternoon. Long before the hour at which it had been announced that the services would take place, a large assemblage gathered in front of Mr. RAYMOND'S residence, No. 12 West Ninth-street, whence the remains were to be escorted to the University-place Presbyterian Church, corner of Tenth-street and University-place. In front of the church, also, a large gathering waited for the doors to open, and when they could obtain admittance, filled the edifice to overflowing, with the exception of the pews on either side of the central aisle, which had been reserved for those who were to accompany the remains to the church.

Meantime the rain began to fall in torrents, but in spite of the storm those in front of the church and those in front of the private residence kept their places and patiently waited. At 4:30 P. M. the pall-bearers, the chief mourners, the representatives of the Associated Press, and the friends and relatives of the bereaved family were assembled at Mr. RAYMOND'S residence, where, in the drawing-room, in an elegant rosewood coffin, a portion of the lid of which was removed, the beloved features that they were on this day to look upon for the last time were exposed to view. The countenance had undergone no perceptible change. The expression was one of placidity such as the face might have borne if he were lying there in a peaceful slumber and visited by pleasant dreams. The remains were dressed in a suit of black, and the hands were crossed upon the breast. The silver plate on the coffin-lid bore this inscription:

HENRY J. RAYMOND.
DIED JUNE 18, 1869.
AGED 49 YEARS, 4 MONTHS AND 24 DAYS.

Upon the coffin lay wreaths and crosses of immortelles, placed there by loving hands.

Rev. Professor SHIPMAN offered a fervent prayer for the family, invoking upon them the divine mercy in their terrible bereavement, and asking that they might have strength to bear with meekness and humility the inflictions of His chastening hand. After all present had viewed the remains they were placed in a hearse, the concourse of spectators uncovering as they were borne from the house, and the procession moved through Tenth-street and University-place to the church in the following order:

1. The Reverend Clergy—Rev. STEPHEN H. TYNG, of St. George's Church; Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn and Rev. A. H. KELLOGG, of the University-place Presbyterian Church.

2. The hearse containing the remains, followed by the pall-bearers in carriages:

The Mayor of the City,	Admiral Farragut,
Maj.-Gen. John A. Dix,	Maj.-Gen. I. McDowell,
Judge C. P. Daly,	Hon. E. D. Morgan,
Mr. Thurlow Weed,	James Watson Webb,
Mr. Horace Greeley,	Mr. B. F. Tracy,
Mr. A. T. Stewart,	Mr. M. H. Grinnell,
Mr. Geo. W. Curtis,	Mr. C. C. Norvell.

3. The chief mourners—Mr. HENRY W. RAYMOND, only son of deceased; Mr. SAMUEL B. RAYMOND, of Rochester, and Mr. J. F. RAYMOND, of Detroit, brothers of deceased; his brothers-in-law, Mr. BENEDICT and Mr. WEAVER; Mr. GEORGE JONES, his partner and copublisher; Judge C. L. BENEDICT, of Brooklyn, and Mr. GILBERT E. JONES.

4. The physicians of deceased—Drs. DEWEESE, RICHARDS, HUBBARD and DOUGLAS.

5. The representatives of the Associated Press: Mr. D. M. STONE, of the Journal of Commerce, Chairman.

Mr. ERASTUS BROOKS, of the New-York Express.

Mr. CHARLES A. DANA, of the New-York Sun.

Mr. SAML. SINCLAIR, of the New-York Evening Mail.

Mr. HENRY WM. HURLBURT, of the New-York World.

6. The editorial, reportorial and business staff of the TIMES, composed of the following gentlemen:

S. S. Conant,	John Swinton,
Geo. Sheppard,	Geo. Pond,
M. Hennessy,	J. C. E. Coleman,
J. H. Thompson,	Frederick A. Schwab,
Edwin M. Bacon,	A. S. Mills,
C. C. Norvell,	John Ireland,
William F. G. Shanks,	Augustin Snow,
R. R. Sinclair,	Edward Crapsey,
G. F. Williams,	Charles Worley,
Gouverneur Carr,	Alfred Ford,
Thomas M. Newbould,	S. P. Cooper,
James C. Carlisle,	William Herries,
C. Morey,	Theodore Feverally,
John Webb,	S. B. Todd,
Henry Glassford,	J. O. Harper,
M. P. Gale,	G. S. Thompson,
George Preston,	J. R. Wells,
Thomas Love,	Robert Finan.

7. Other friends of the family and of the deceased.

AT THE CHURCH.

The large crowd which had been waiting round the church doors availed themselves of the first opportunity of entering, and soon after the doors were opened the edifice was filled to overflowing. The galleries were crowded with ladies and children, and the seats on the floor of the church were occupied by numbers of our most prominent officials, literary men, merchants and lawyers.

Among those present were Ex-Governor Fenton, Ex-Lieutenant-Governor George W. Patterson, General Daniel E. Sickles, Mr. Abell, of Livingston County, Paul S. Forbes, Judges Daly and Alker, Wm. B. Stuart, Hon. Thos. E. Stewart, Ex-Postmaster Kelly, Clinton W. Tayloure, Hon. J. W. Hunter, Manuel B. Field, Postmaster Jones, Ex-Assessor E. D. Webster, J. W. Wesley, Professor Ossenyon, S. R. Hughes, Isaac Van Anden, C. Warburton, J. B. Swain, the New-York Herald Club represented by Messrs. Samuel Glenn, Wm. P. Smythe, G. W. Hosmer, John J. Fitzpatrick, J. C. Fitzpatrick, Chas. H. Farrell, Charles G. Shanks, Ashley W. Cole and Michael J. Kelly; General John Cochrane, Marshall O. Roberts, the Presidents and numerous representatives of the Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets Republican Clubs, Charles A. Dana, editor of the Sun; George P. Putnam, the well-known publisher; Charles L. Brace, Alderman White, Theodore Tilton, of the Independent; Whitelaw Reid, managing editor of the Tribune; Isaac W. England, publisher of the Sun; and Joseph Howard, Jr., of the Star, besides numerous other representatives of all the papers in the City.

On the arrival of the funeral cortège at the church, the clergy, consisting of Rev. Dr. TYNG, of St. George's, Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Rev. ALFRED H. KELLOGG, Pastor of the Church, and Rev. G. T. BEDELL, proceeded to the porch and there received the remains, which they preceded up the aisle, Rev. Dr. TYNG reading the appropriate services. The coffin having been deposited near the communion table, the anthem commencing "Lord, let me know my end and the number of my days," was given with fine effect by the choir. The usual services of the Episcopal Church were then read by Rev. Dr. TYNG in a very impressive manner. After which the congregation joined in the hymn "I would not live alway."

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER then advanced to the altar and delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF MR. BEECHER.

It is not expected that I should indulge in eulogy, nor even that I should attempt to recount the prominent facts in the history of him who is gone. But a few days ago he walked in manly vigor and unceasing activity. But to-day! Not when he was born, nor when he was in his cradle was he weaker than now. This man of strength and power in his coffin! So gentle, so instant was his death that it was as the fall of some mighty tree that had filled the air, wide and broad, with its strength and richness, but in an hour has felt the woodman's ax, and the place that knew it knows it no more, and will not forever. It is seldom that any one passes from life who has had any public position except the one he has built up for himself, on whose departure there has been so much sympathy, and good will, and admiration, and grief, and affection expressed as in the case of Mr. RAYMOND. He was called to a sphere of trouble by his very nature, contentious, and was long habituated to discussion in times that have swayed men and the nation to the very bottom. Scarcely had his departure been flashed through the land, than with lightning-like rapidity comes back the testimony of his antagonists and friends to his goodness of nature, to his great capacity and the purity of his motives, and to the good work which he has done in his own community and the nation. It is a testimony of witnesses to the real goodness of this man, that those who were most opposed to him, that those whose hands were lifted with the pen of contest, held it down to write his eulogy and express their heartfelt grief. He was a man who loved and was beloved. He was a man without hate, and, I might almost say, without animosity; a man the nearer you came to him and the better you knew him, the more you esteemed and loved him. You trusted him if you knew him; if you knew him it was to love him; and it is no small thing to say in this selfish world that his like is rarely met with. There are two things which I wish to emphasize in his public career, and only two. He stood in the widest pulpit that is known in modern society. The lawyer has his narrow sphere of the forum; the representative the close walks of the Legislature; the minister has his parish and the walls of his church; and scarcely speaks beyond. But there is, in this day, a pulpit which has no limit. It is that of the Press. It is literally the voice of one that speaks, that is crying in the wilderness. For all creeds, and for all the populace of the land throughout the nation's territories, from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean, the daily papers speak; and there is not in modern civilization a power which can compare with this. There is no place in the land which has so developed the daily Press as this; and among the builders—I do not say the founders—but among the builders up of this foundation stands Mr. RAYMOND preeminently. Aside from his general abilities, he identified the Press; and I remark, and it is most grateful in such a time as this to remark upon it—I remark how singularly free his whole career has been from bitterness; how he refused to gain strength by the advocacy of passion; how he never used the malign passions, but appealed to them in others; how reason and the higher moral sentiments breathed in his work; how to you in these higher feelings he attired himself. And now that he has departed to look back upon his career and see how he yielded that mighty engine in behalf of good reason, in behalf of moral sentiments, covered a multitude of imperfections. I have it in my heart also to say—because, in common with all of you, I have heard his instability cited—I have heard it said that he was weak and trimming; but I have never believed it. I recollect the time when the nation shivered like an aspen-leaf—when one man was worth an army. Those qualities which he possessed above all others were hope and indomitable courage. I remember, and ever shall feel grateful to him, that he was ever placed to the front rank and who let his voice ring out clearly without a moment's hesitation, with the most unceasing energy to the end of the contest, that gave courage and hope and life to the great people. If this was trimming, oh, that there had been more such trimmers! That was a service which should enshrine a man's memory in a country's history, and make his name dear to the people. I thanked him for it. I still thank him; and I am glad to make mention of, and bear this testimony to, his fidelity in those days, when to be faithful required greatness of soul. My friends, it seems impossible that we are speaking of one who so little time ago walked among us; it seems impossible that we shall never see again that cheerful face, and take that cordial grasp; that we shall walk with him no more, and hear his counsel no more. But he is gone. He has fallen in the very prime of his life. The next ten years ought to have been worth more to the land to him than the last twenty were. He had taxed the resources of his life unduly, and has been cast down prematurely, because he had not lived within the due bounds of moderation in the use of himself. For obedience to God requires moderation in industries, not inordinate activities, even in the best spheres of life. He cannot repair the error, but I may say that we shall give some heed to it in this place of instruction. My voice can do him no good, or I would pour it out. Though I cannot do him any good by praise or by criticism, yet I hope that there may be some benefit to us in this solemn scene. For myself, for you, for all of us, is herein a lesson. What are those things which engaged his days and hours? What are the cares, the frets, the petty ambitions, the stinging annoyances, the small strifes, the friction, the sweat and tear of life? What are those things as we stand here and look upon them, laid prostrate by this hand, that should measure the worth of all things? What are those things that are great? How vain, how useless! What best may we do that, judged by this hour, we shall stand by his memory who lived not for himself but so associated himself with the welfare of mankind, especially with the community in which he was placed, that the work he leaves behind him shall be his memorial. For no man is great enough to be remembered in selfishness. The things which shall make our names memorable are those things which we do upon others and for others. Not those who have lived for themselves, but those who have lived for others, for their country, for their age. You and I, too, are long shall come to this hour. You are strong, the blood beats now healthily in your veins, but in a short time you too shall be in the coffin, and you shall be followed by your friends to the tomb. Could we, if you were called hence to-day, speak well of your history? Have you earned the right to be spoken of gratefully in this solemn hour, and have your name handed down to others? Are you living above the world while in it, christianly, purely and nobly? Are you living with fear of God and with hope of immortality? For surely it is no unmeaning service of respect that you pay to-day. You come here to wear a noble mantle, to take on the vows of a higher fidelity and to retain a sense of the urgency and importance of life. You come here to rebuke your passions, to seek the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, to check the uprising of pride and selfishness, and to take upon you the purpose and vows of fidelity to God and man. Blessed are they who when passing away need not the adventitious circumstance of place. Blessed are they whose mourners are those who have been the recipients of their continued kindness, they who have made their memories dear to hearts which they have enriched and blessed. And now, to-morrow and next week his name will be familiar, and many of us will cherish it as long as we live. But this great thundering city is like the ocean, and as when one falls overboard and gives one outcry, and the flying motion is directed, but the huge waves close over the wrinkles soon smoothed out and the sea is as fuller than before, so the great multitude will forget him and pass on. You who are so important to-day may be insignificant to-morrow. You who are taking hold of the very springs of life will drop them from your fingers. Oh, that God may grant to us all such a sense of our weakness here and responsibility there, that we may so improve life that when we lay it down we shall take it up again beyond the grave in a land where death is no more and where there is immortality and blessedness.

Rev. A. H. KELLOGG then delivered the following prayer:

O thou God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ! Thou dost invite us to perfect confidence in Thee. Thou hast encouraged us in Thy blessed Word that Thou art a Being of infinite perfections, and boundless in Thy love and in Thy grace; that Thou art the same when Thou dost smite as when Thou art smiling; that Thou dost bind up the wounds of the broken-hearted; that Thou dost bind up the broken heart, as Thou hast said that "Thou will not break the bruised reed." And do Thou grant that we may therefore come into Thy presence with perfect trust and faith in Thy attributes and in Thy mercy. And do Thou vouchsafe by Thy Holy Spirit, which shall be the Comforter, to grant us that comfort where with Thou alone canst comfort Thy bereaved children. And do Thou especially, we beseech Thee, be nigh unto those from whom Thou hast taken away the strong staff, and while they weep this day because of Thy heavy hand upon them, do Thou give unto them grace that they may know it is as Thy faithful correction; and that we may remember and perceive that it shall be good unto those that are patiently exercised thereby. And grant unto us all that we may perceive the workings of Thy providence; that we may regard every day while we are in life we are liable to be called away at any time to give an account of our stewardship unto Thee. And do Thou grant that we may be faithful in our various callings and avocations; that we may be earnest in doing the work Thou hast committed to our hand. Do Thou grant that we may be the means of doing some good in any day and generation, and do Thou grant, Lord, to give us success in the various ministries which have been committed to us. May we be earnest in our work and labor of love, and live unto Thee; and may we die in union with Thy Church, with a good and reasonable and religious hope—a good hope through Christ—of acceptance with Thee. And do Thou grant unto us an interest in that statement of our Blessed Lord and Saviour, and may we all be saved by faith in Him. And now do Thou dismiss us with Thy blessing, and may we receive it with joy; and may we experience that it is better to come to the house of mourning than to come to the house of feasting. Hear our prayer, and accept us for Jesus Christ's sake. Our Father, &c.

The benediction having been pronounced, those who were present embraced the opportunity of viewing the remains, passing up the central aisle and thence through the chancel to the street. This occupied several minutes, owing to the large number who were in attendance.

The body was allowed to remain in the church all night, and will be privately interred at Greenwood Cemetery to-day. None but members of the family will be present.

Sentiment of the London Press.

LONDON, Monday, June 21.

The announcement of the sudden death of HENRY J. RAYMOND, which was received here by the cable on Saturday, creates a deep feeling of sorrow. The Pall Mall Gazette eulogizes Mr. RAYMOND as a publicist and journalist, and says his death creates a gap which cannot be filled.

The Daily Telegraph, in a similar article, says: "In private life Mr. RAYMOND was amiable, courteous, loyal and hospitable, and he was beloved by all, even when opposed to many in politics."

Resolutions of the Washington Correspondents' Club.

WASHINGTON, Monday, June 21.

The following resolutions have been adopted by the Correspondents' Club on the death of Mr. RAYMOND:

Whereas, We, the members of the Washington Correspondents' Club, have heard with sincere and heartfelt regret the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND; and

Whereas, We feel that in his decease American journalism has lost one of its most distinguished, able and useful leaders and representatives, and the country one of its best, wisest and most patriotic citizens and statesmen.

Resolved, That we, the members of the Washington Correspondents' Club, while bowing to the infinite wisdom which has removed him from among us, mingle our regrets with those of our professional brethren elsewhere at what seems to our vision his untimely death, and unite with them in acknowledging and honoring the ability which placed him in the front rank among journalists, in applauding the wisdom and purity which won him honor and leadership, and in revering the many great public and private virtues which rendered him admired and beloved, and which shall ever endear his memory to us and to his country.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved family the expression of our sympathy and condolence in their sorrow, and that a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to them by the officers of the Club.

Dispatch from Senator Conkling.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Monday, June 21.

Hon. Charles A. Dana:

I sincerely mourn, and many with me here, the death of Mr. RAYMOND.

(Signed) ROSCOE CONKLING.

Resolutions of the Board of Aldermen on Mr. Raymond's Death.

At a meeting of the Board of Aldermen yesterday, Mr. WHITE offered the following resolutions:

Whereas, Together with their fellow-citizens, the Common Council of the City of New-York are called upon to deplore the sudden and untimely end of Hon. HENRY JARVIS RAYMOND;

Resolved, That we hold in remembrance and honor the career by which he acquired fame for himself and credit to the State in which he was born, and the City in which he spent the prime of his life.

Resolved, That whether as member of the Assembly, Lieutenant-Governor of the State, or Representative of the State in Congress, his public services were marked by ability and fidelity, and that the same qualities enabled him to establish and maintain a journal ranking among the foremost of its contemporaries, and a monument to his indefatigable industry and a source of honor.

Resolved, That the loss that the community has thus sustained is difficult to bear and still more difficult to make good, and that we deeply sympathize with his immediate relatives and friends to whom his countrymen at large.

Resolved, That out of respect to the memory of deceased the flags on the City Hall be displayed to half-mast while the remains are therein.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing resolutions suitably engrossed and framed, be transmitted by the Clerk of the Common Council to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were seconded by Mr. WARD, who said that the district he had the honor to represent was the first to give Mr. RAYMOND a political nomination and to introduce him to public life. He had known Mr. RAYMOND, and he honored him as a politician, a cultured gentleman, an honest man and a good citizen. He felt that not only Mr. RAYMOND'S family and friends, but the country at large has sustained by his death a loss which was irreparable. He trusted that the resolutions would be adopted.

The resolutions were then adopted unanimously, and the Board immediately afterward adjourned.

The Pennsylvania Registry Law—The Grounds of Judge Sharswood's Decision.

As already stated in the TIMES, Judge SHARSWOOD, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, on Saturday, declared the new Registry law of that State unconstitutional. The case was that of PATTERSON et al. vs. The various city officers of Philadelphia, and was brought to test the law. In the course of the opinion the following points were presented:

1. By the general system, meaning that provided for the State generally, the officers of the election are chosen, as heretofore, by the electors of each election district. In Philadelphia they are to be appointed by a Board composed of the Aldermen of the city, persons chosen by the several wards for the performance of entirely different duties.

2. By the general system, the Assessors are bound to assess all persons claiming that privilege at any time up to the tenth day before the election. In Philadelphia no assessment can be made after the 20th day of September in every year.

4. By the general system, the Assessors are bound to assess all who claim a right to vote. In Philadelphia they are to assess only those who are qualified voters at the time of the assessment, and must annex their affidavits to the lists that every person whose name is contained therein is a qualified elector, having a fixed residence in the division, to the best of their knowledge and belief.

4. By the general system a person whose name is not on the Assessors' list may prove his qualification on the day of election at the polls. In Philadelphia he is required to make such proof at least ten days before the election, and to a different tribunal, the Division Canvassers.

5. By the general system the claimant of a vote may prove his residence by any one qualified voter of the district. In Philadelphia he is required to make such proof, in addition to his own oath or affirmation, by the affidavit of two qualified voters of the division, whose names are contained on the Assessors' division transcripts, under the heads of householders.

6. By the general system, in order to prove the payment of taxes, the tax receipt need not be produced if the affiant shall state in his affidavit that it has been lost or destroyed, or that he never received any. In Philadelphia, if his name is not on the original Assessors' list, the tax receipt must be produced in addition to proof made by satisfactory evidence that the tax had been paid to the proper person authorized to receive it.

7. By the general system the Assessors are to place upon their lists and assess all persons claiming a right to vote, without any regard to their condition or station in society. In Philadelphia they are forbidden to assess originally any person boarding at any hotel, tavern, saloon, boarding-house or restaurant, or any person who has not a fixed residence in the district.

8. By the general system, the right of any person claiming to vote may be challenged at the polls on the ground of non-residence by any qualified voter. In Philadelphia no voter whose name is registered can be challenged at the polls on any question of residence.

9. By the general system persons of foreign birth, who have declared their intention to become citizens under the act of Congress, and who design to be naturalized before the next election may be assessed. In Philadelphia no one not actually naturalized on or before the 20th of September can be assessed.

No one would pretend to say that these were not matters of fundamental importance, and in direct violation of the Constitution. The act is, therefore, declared void and of no effect, and the injunction to restrain the various officers from exercising it into operation is granted.

Banquet on the Great Eastern—The Week of Laying the Cable Begun.

PARIS, Monday, June 21—Noon.

A banquet was given on board the steamship Great Eastern last night. Toasts were given in honor of the Emperor NAPOLEON, Queen VICTORIA and President GRANT, and to the union of France, England and America. At an early hour this morning the shore line and the deep-sea cable were spliced, and at daylight the whole expedition put to sea, the Great Eastern paying out the cable with ease and rapidity. Dispatches received from on board the steamer show that the work is going on without interruption.

The Troubles in Ireland—The Irish Church Bill—Reported Withdrawal of the Cambridge Crew from the International Race.

LONDON, Monday, June 21.

In the House of Commons this evening Sir JOHN GRAY, member for Kilkenny, asked the Government if there was any reason to apprehend further troubles in Ireland, and if the military force in that country was to be strengthened. Mr. FORTESCUE, Chief Secretary for Ireland, stated that the Government was informed that Mr. JOHNSTON, a prominent Orange leader in Ireland, had called a meeting to celebrate the anniversary of the 12th of July. This was not an act of hostility to the Government; but the practice of increasing the military force in Ireland about the time of this anniversary was never more necessary than in the present year.

In the House of Lords to-night Earl GREY gave notice that he should move to omit in the Irish Church bill that portion of the preamble which provides that the property or proceeds of said Church shall not be held or applied for the maintenance of any church or clergy or other ministry, or for the teaching of religion.

It is reported that the Cambridge boatmen will withdraw from the match with the Harvard Club.

Yeddo Full of Armed Men—The Crops—Exportation of Teas.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, June 21.

The following additional intelligence was received by the steamer Great Republic, from Yokohama, May 29:

Since the return of the Mikado to Yeddo, the city was full of armed men. The retainers of the Daimios had been summoned to meet His Majesty. The Parliament, consisting of 270 members, was in session in Yeddo.

The markets were dull, with only a few sales of cotton goods; woolens were unchanged. The business in silk was limited; the settlements amounted to 150 picule, chiefly medium and lower class. The stock of silk had been reduced to 40 picule, and prices were unchanged, with symptoms of a weakness for inferior kinds. The weather is favorable to the new crop, and the worms had successfully reached the second stage.

The exports for the present season amount to 14,400 bales. Teas.—The exports from Yokohama for the season amounts to 10,986,700 pounds. But few samples of new tea have been received; not enough to report on satisfactorily. Settlements for American markets, 300 picule. The stock was low and prices firm. Freights—To New-York, per sail, $4; per steamer, $45.

Travel on the Pacific Railroad—Gold Hunters for Alaska.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, June 21.

Ex-Senator WADE, Senator ROSCOE CONKLING and party have arrived here from the East in PULLMAN'S palace car. A party left Sacramento for New-York on the 19th of June, including Governor BLAIRDELL, of Nevada, and other prominent Nevadians and Californians.

Companies A, D and G, Eighteenth United States Cavalry, left here on Saturday for Arizona.

A schooner sailed hence last week carrying a party of prospectors for gold fields in Alaska.

A small boat belonging to the United States steamer Mohican, was sunk by the Oakland ferry-boat on Friday, causing the drowning of Midshipman W. H. SOURS, of Augusta, Me.

A large quantity of opium, received by the steamship Great Republic, has been seized by the revenue authorities for violation of the Custom laws.

Another Revolution in Tahiti.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, June 21.

Advices from Tahiti announce another revolution in that island. The Governor of Tahiti, Count DISERACIERE, proclaimed his intention of establishing a new form of Internal Government and proceeded to arrest M. BOYER, the Ordonateur, and M. WALARE, who had recently arrived from France as Procureur of the Imperial Chef de Justice Judiciare, by appointment by the Emperor. They had only disapproved of any change in the recognized Government, but the Governor accused them of conspiracy against his person. No communication with others was permitted them, and writing materials were refused. Orders were immediately issued to prepare the French transport Chesert for sea, the object being to remove Mr. BOYER from the island. There was great indignation and excitement among the people of Tahiti, and the arrival of the present Governor's successor was anxiously awaited.

THE INDIANS.

Attack on a Surveying Party—Spotted Tail on the War Path—The Sioux Still Fighting.

ST. LOUIS, Monday, June 21.

The Republican has a special from Hays City, Kansas, dated June 19, which says: Colonel GREENWOOD'S surveying party, who are surveying the route of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, from Sheridan to Denver, was attacked this morning a few miles beyond Sheridan by a band of Cheyennes. The surveyors were well armed, and, after a desperate fight, succeeded in killing four Indians, wounding several and putting the balance to flight. Two brothers in GREENWOOD'S party, named SCHUYLER, were wounded, one critically and the other slightly. The Indians report that Spotted Tail, with two hundred lodges, has left the reservation, and is coming down, with what intention is not known. Army officers who came down on the steamer Cora report a fight between the Sioux and Reis below Fort Buford, in which the Sioux lost ten killed and fifteen wounded, and the latter lost one killed and thirty wounded. The Sioux have gone for reinforcements, and intend to renew the fight.

BASE BALL.

The Red Stockings vs. The Athletics, in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, June 21.

About 20,000 persons witnessed the game of base ball between the Red Stockings, of Cincinnati, and the Athletics, of this city. The Athletics were short their pitcher and their play was not up to their usual standard, while the Red Stockings played well, making but few misplays. The game resulted in favor of the Cincinnati club by a score of 27 to 18, as follows:

Cincinnati.....	2,	5,	0,	1,	0,	5,	5,	9,	5—27.
Athletic.....	0,	1,	0,	1,	1,	4,	1,	7,	1—16.

The Recent Revenue Seizures in St. Louis—Troops for Texas—The Weather in St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Monday, June 21.

The sugar, coffee, cigars and pepper which were seized in May last by the Surveyor of this port, for alleged fraudulent withdrawal from the Custom-house at New-Orleans, were, on Friday and Saturday, in course of transfer from the different premises in this city to the United States bonded warehouse. The total value of the property seized was between $70,000 and $80,000. Some forty merchants were innocently involved in the transaction.

A company of the Tenth United States Infantry arrived here on Saturday from St. Paul, and were transferred to the steamer Thompson Dean, for New-Orleans, whence they will proceed to Brownsville, Texas.

A heavy storm of rain passed over this city yesterday afternoon. The weather had been very warm for several days, the thermometer indicating 90° in the shade; but since the storm, the temperature has been a good deal cooler.

Elmira College—The Annual Excursion Party.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Monday, June 21.

The Elmira College annual excursion party will leave this city for a tour of the Upper Lakes to-morrow morning. The party numbers about one hundred ladies and gentlemen, under the direction of Professor FORD, of the College. Among the prominent gentlemen accompanying the excursion are Rev. Dr. COWLES, President of the College, Professor C. S. FARRAR, of Vassar College, Hon. E. S. PARKER, Ex-Mayor of this City, and others. The representatives of the Elmira Press will also be of the company. The party have chartered the splendid screw propeller Pacific at Buffalo for the trip, at a cost of $2,000, and will leave that city to-morrow afternoon. Wednesday will be spent in Cleveland, and Thursday in Detroit. The whole time occupied will be about ten days. The trip includes a visit to the copper mines of Lake Superior.

A British Ship in Distress off Tybee.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Monday, June 21.

The ship Festaladon, from Matanzas, for Falmouth, England, arrived off Tybee yesterday in distress. Her Captain and one seaman died on Saturday, and several of her crew are now sick.

The Court of Appeals Calendar.

ALBANY, Monday, June 21.

The following is the day calendar of the Court of Appeals for Tuesday, June 22: 20, 22, 170, 172, 174, 176, 176, 177, 178, 180, 181, 46, 51, 128, 82.

Miscellaneous Telegrams.

PHILADELPHIA, June 21.—A fire last evening destroyed the extensive carpenter shop of STANTON & MCGARVEY, on Twenty-third and Market streets. The stables adjoining, with a valuable horse, were also consumed. It is thought that the fire was the work of an incendiary. The loss, which is heavy, is not stated.

ALBANY, N. Y., June 21.—JAMES RUSSELL, a bold and skilled shop-lifter was arrested in New-York and brought here yesterday to answer a charge of grand larceny. ...ARTHUR A. SMITH, a carriman, was arrested last evening for making a murderous assault on his wife with a carving knife, inflicting a serious wound in the neck.

PROVIDENCE, June 21.—The June meeting of the Narragansett Park Association commences to-morrow and continues four days. Premiums have been offered amounting to $15,000. Many famous horses have been entered, and a large attendance of people is anticipated.

TROY, N. Y., June 21.—The straw paper mill of BEACH & CO., at Sandy Hill, was burned on Saturday night. The loss is $20,000; insurance from $10,000 to $18,000.

BOSTON, Mass., June 21.—Governor CLAFLIN has signed the Prohibitor Liquor law, to go into effect July 1.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 21.—Mrs. ANN PRESTLOSHEL was burned to death yesterday by the explosion and ignition of a can of coal oil.

WARRENSBURG, N. Y., June 21.—The first through passenger train over the Adirondack Railroad, from Saratoga, arrived at Thurman Station, three miles from this place, at 12:15 P. M. to-day. Hereafter the trains will run regularly, making the new route to Lake George.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

Execution of Cyrus Coachman, the Negro Murderer, at Darlington Court-House—Singular Spectacle—Demeanor of the Negro Sheriff—Last Speech of the Condemned.

From the Charleston News.

FLORENCE, S. C., Friday, June 18.

The first execution in South Carolina, under the new Radical State Government, took place to-day. At 4:30 this afternoon, COACHMAN, a negro murderer, paid the penalty of his crime at Darlington Court-house. The event was attended with considerable excitement throughout this and the adjoining counties, especially among the colored population. The whites, too, had their interest aroused by the fact that the Sheriff and most of the other officials who were to act on the occasion were negroes.

HISTORY OF THE CASE.

CYRUS COACHMAN, colored, was convicted before Judge RUTLAND, at the last term of Court in Darlington, of the murder of ROBERT P. SUGGS, colored, near Florence, on the 10th of January, 1869, and sentenced to be hanged. The execution of the sentence was delayed, in order to allow time for an investigation of the case by the Governor, to whom a petition for pardon was made. The Governor, as is his plan, now with all such cases, applied to the Judge for his opinion on the case. Judge RUTLAND wrote an opinion, and also submitted an outline of the testimony, which was voluminous. The murdered man SUGGS was clerk in a store, and was murdered by a party of five persons for the purpose of stealing the goods in the store. Some of the goods were found with COACHMAN—in his house and about it. His explanation was that he bought them from one of the other four—one who was not caught. It was clearly proven that SUGGS was murdered by one of a party of five, and two witnesses identified COACHMAN as one of that five, although it could not be proven that he dealt the fatal blow. His being present, aiding and abetting, is as conclusive against him in law as if he were proven to have himself done the deed. All the witnesses concur in proving COACHMAN to have been present. Judge RUTLAND describes COACHMAN as having a bad face, and the homicide as a most daring, unprovoked, premeditated act. The case was well defended; but COACHMAN was convicted mainly upon negro evidence, and by a jury partly composed of colored men.

The ground of appeal for Executive clemency consisted almost entirely in a feeble doubt as to identity. At the Coroner's inquest, at which EDWARD JACKSON, colored—who was also tried for the murder along with COACHMAN—was present and COACHMAN was not, one witness, WINDHAM, swore that JACKSON was the murderer. Witnesses seem to have relied entirely in this identification upon the coat that JACKSON wore at the inquest, swearing then that the coat was the same as that worn by the murderer. When, however, WINDHAM was confronted with JACKSON (without the coat) and COACHMAN together in court, he swore that the

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

OUR NEW WEST. By SAMUEL BOWLES. (Hartford: Hartford Publishing Company. New-York: J. D. DENISON.)

We recently noticed Mr. BOWLES' "Switzerland of America"—a little book treating of the Colorado portion of his journey to the Great West a year or two ago; and we have here, in a larger and more comprehensive shape, the narrative of his entire expedition, made in company with Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX, Governor HOYT, Lieutenant-Governor BROSS and their party, across the continent and along the Pacific slope. It is a well-written volume on a subject which, as all readers are aware, is of a general and surpassing interest. Our New West, described in it, contains more than half the territory of the entire Union, and comprehends the wildest, greatest, most beautiful and most bountiable features of that magnificent area. It has an extent of seventeen hundred miles from the Missouri westward to the Pacific—the thoroughfare being four stages, the first called the Plains, stretching from Omaha westward for five hundred miles, over a treeless grounds that looks level to the eye, but in reality gradually rises to the passes of the Rocky Mountains; the second, extending from these last, for five hundred miles more, at a height of ten or twelve thousand feet above the sea-level, over a succession of ridges and rolling ground, rich in a world of minerals, and full of the most impressive spectacles of natural scenery, to the edge of the Salt Lake Basin; the third, measured still westward for a space of five hundred miles, through a rather doleful alkali region, rising gradually between Mormondom and the Nevada Sierra into an elevation of seven thousand feet at the halfway place, and subsiding at the ridge in about four thousand; and the fourth stage of two hundred miles going from the Nevada ridge down to Sacramento and the sea, thus completing the long thoroughfare of half the continent.

The work begins with the highly-interesting story of the great roadway, through all its windings; and then the reader is carried into the vigorous young State of Colorado, so distinguished among the States for its high-rolling and forest-covered mountains, its broad parks lying like paradises within their gigantic hill-enclosures, and its quiet and intelligent race of Utes or "Mountaineers," bearing a name autochthonous and born of the ground they have trod for ages, among the ridges and gorges of that grand Oberland—a very striking and attractive subject, to which we lately directed attention. From Colorado we are conducted to the Salt Lake City, where the party of tourists were received with extraordinary welcome and hospitality by Mr. YOUNG, the patriarch, and all his melancholy Mormons. Mr. BOWLES knows "how to observe," and he gives a great variety of interesting information concerning that Valley and its people. He noticed a system of cooperative trading among them, such as in the older States has cost so much effort and produced so little benefit. In the Salt Lake City that principle is at work, not for the reasons that urge people in the East, but under the stimulus of self-defence against the Gentiles, who are now preparing to pour in upon them and threaten to diminish them or do away with them. The Mormon rulers, anxious to keep together their peculiar flock now numbering about 125,000 persons, have made working, manufacturing and trading organizations, under which they will act together and trade with one another, thus giving them a motive and encouragement to preserve their name and character in any future pressure of circumstances. The cooperative business is connected with their Church government, and this last, also, will have the benefit of the principle—a principle which, curiously enough, seems to bring back something of the Middle Age system which made the Church and the State work together. The Mormons appear to succeed in these economic plans of theirs; and perhaps our own baffled experimentalists may yet learn something from them on this subject. Mr. BOWLES noticed another fact which also has its bearing on the social economy of the Mormons in its department of agriculture—though the wisdom of the Elders has nothing to do with it. It is the change observable in the climate of that region. On this subject our author says:

"But a singular change seems to be creeping over all our Western regions under settlement, in this matter of climate and of rain. Summer rains are palpably more frequent than of old, because of irrigation is lessening, especially for the grains and slow growing vegetables. When the Mormons first came here, there was no rain from April to November; but now Summer showers are of frequent occurrence. It is so in Colorado and in California; there is a growth in the moisture of the Summer and a lessening need of artificial watering for the main crops. The phenomenon is peculiar, and has yet received no satisfactory explanation. Connected with this change, it is observed here that Salt Lake is rising in size and depth, and the Jordan increasing in width and slugginess of movement. In broader phrase, the whole basin, once evidently filled with water, is slowly returning to its old condition. The lake is rising at the rate of a foot a year. General COMSTOCK's little steamer, that has been carrying tics for the railroad across the lake during the last year, certainly rode for a mile over what was good grazing-ground five years before. Does Providence propose to drown the Mormons out, and with water solve the problem that is puzzling our moral philosophers and statesmen?"

This is a remarkable fleece of information, which should deeply concern all Mormondom. The increase of the rains in the Valley would be an unspeakable benefit to the country population. But, on the other hand, this increase may in time drown them all out, and leave their civilization at the bottom of the lake, like that of the other Cities of the Plain, in the neighborhood of the other Jordan. The prospect is calculated to be an uncomfortable one for the Mormons, unless they can console themselves with the saying of of the celebrated French philosophers, who cared very little for a "deluge" which was to come after their times. A great many other notable features of Mormonism are discussed in these pages, and Mr. BOWLES quotes a curious list of Mr. YOUNG's wives, that gives a glimpse into the bosom of his "happy family." On the subject of that grotesque and short-sighted institution, Messrs. YOUNG, KIMBALL, SMITH and others talked very freely with Mr. COLFAX and his friends, looking to the changes which were approaching the Valley with the coming railway to the Pacific. Mr. BOWLES thus describes their conversation:

"It was not long after we were seated ere he blurted out the blunt question to Mr. COLFAX: 'Well, now you have conquered the South and abolished slavery, what are you going to do with us and our polygamy?' With his usual tact, Mr. COLFAX replied that he had no authority to speak for the Government; but for himself, if he might be permitted to make the suggestion, he had hoped the prophets of the church would have a new revelation on the subject, which should put a stop to the practice of polygamy. He added further that, as the people of Missouri and Maryland, without waiting for the action of the General Government against slavery, themselves believing it to be wrong and an impediment to their prosperity, had taken measures to abolish it, so he hoped the people of the Mormon Church would see that polygamy was a hindrance and not a help, had move for its abandonment. Mr. YOUNG responded quickly, and frankly, and apparently as much to the surprise of his friends as to our own, that he should readily welcome such a revelation; that polygamy was not in the original Mormon Bible, the famous book of the church, but was an essential practice in the church, but only a privilege and a duty, under special command of God; that he knew it had been abused; that people had entered into polygamy who might not to have done so, and against his protestations and advice; and that wives and husbands, in polygamy, were constantly fretting him with their troubles. As the same time, he defended the practice as having biblical authority, and as having, within proper limits, a sound, moral and philosophical reason and propriety.

The discussion, thus opened, grew heated and sharp, though ever good-natured. Mr. YOUNG was asked how he got over the fact that the two sexes were about equally divided all over the world, and that if some men had two, five, or twenty wives, others would have to go without altogether. His reply was that there was always a considerable proportion of the sexes who were 'married men,' who were old bachelors from choice. 'But,' retorted one, 'are there any more of such than of women who choose to be old maids?' 'Oh yes,' said he, most ingenuously; 'there is not one woman in a million who will not marry if she gets a chance!'

It would seem evident that the Mormons are ready to obey the law of the land in the matter of polygamy; but also determined to maintain their peculiar economy in all things else. They may yet lose all their extravagance and become very good and profitable citizens, like the Friends, the Shakers and other sects, who also went very much out of the way at first and did reprehensible things; but are now patterns of social equality and good conduct.

The succeeding chapters take us to the Nevada range, to Virginia and Gold Hill, and give the history of that newest of our mineral Eldorados—a wonderful and rainless region of sulphur and soda, barren rocks and boiling springs, yet mightily puzzling to Uncle Sam, and suggesting the general question—"What will he do with it?" At present his people dig part of it for silver, and, for the rest, he is content to leave what other great good may be in it "to the next ages and posterity," as Chancellor BACON left his own rather doubtful justification. It is a pleasant change to quit such a crude sort of territory and take, with our author, over the Nevada ridge, across the broad blue mountain lake, Tahoe, 6,000 feet above the sea-level, onward and downward through the waving forestry and rich vegetation of the Western slopes to Sacramento and San Francisco, and all the sunburnt magnificence and fertility of California. Mr. BOWLES' descriptions of the Golden State in this book are very clear and comprehensive, setting before the mind's eye the grand outlines and distinctive features of the country—its bounding and central mountains; its great valley between them, with its large rivers and their followers; its various climates and its natural wonders of history, working with all her strong elements about her. The summaries of our author take the imagination very agreeably. Here is one of them:

"While the novelties of climate, the strange and wonderful variety of surface and form in nature, the combination of the beautiful and the anomalous, the fascinating and the repulsive, that California everywhere presents, arouse every enthusiasm and excite every interest, it is to the students of science that the people the most original and proves the most engaging. He finds here not only novelties in forms and facts, but revolutions in theory, and sees that he must begin anew to observe and recreate the science of the world's history. There are evidences of glaciers that surpassed those of Switzerland; there are proofs of volcanic revolutions that utterly changed the form of the Continent, and the nature of vegetable, animal and human life upon it; where these mountains now rise were once grand rivers; out of their depths have been dug the bones of a gigantic race that lived farther back in the ages than human life was ever before known, or, perhaps, suspected by the most audacious theorists; the State has diluvial deposits fifteen hundred feet deep, and granite mountains twelve to fifteen thousand feet high, and others of lava and slate and metamorphic rock of nearly equal height; silent craters are open upon many of her highest peaks; where Switzerland has one mountain thirteen thousand feet high, California has a hundred; she has a waterfall fifteen times as high as Niagara; she has lakes 1,000 feet in depth of water will sink in their waters; others so vicious that they will consume a man, body, boots and breeches, within thirty days; she has inexhaustible mines of gold, quicksilver and copper; she keeps a miniature hell in that as warning to the wicked some of our; she has fiery deserts with poisonous waters, where life cannot live; she has the most fertile valleys that will grow more wheat and vegetables than any other equal space in the whole nation; in short, her nature is as boundless in its fecundity and variety as it is strange and startling in its forms; while her men are the most enterprising and hardy, and her women the most intellectual and the most highly refined; and her children the stoutest, sturdiest and the saucicest of any in all the known world!"

The chapter on San Francisco, its social aspects and the statistics of its prosperity, is a very agreeable one; and perhaps still more agreeable are those following, which describe the excursions away into the country, among the Spanish Missions, the Geysers, the huge trees of Mariposa, the gorges of Yo Semite—all matters of picturesque interest, especially the last, which must forever be the Chamounix, and more, of its beautiful Oberland. In the midst of that rare and amazing valley our author feels like most of those who have ever stood in the same place—"he just stares." He says:

"Now imagine one, root-rising up, sheer and sharp, on each side of this line of fertile beauty, irregularly sowing and variously crowned walls of granite rock, thrice as high as the Connecticut Valley's Mounts Tom and Holyoke, twice as high as Berkshire's Graylock, and quite as high as New-Hampshire's Mount Washington; the rock greatly varied in color, from grayish drab or yellow to the dominant shade, warm and soft. In large spots it whitens out; and again it is dark and discolored as if by long exposure to rain and snow and wind. Sometimes the light and dark shades are thrown into sharp contrast in a single wall, and great knob where the Zebra and Dr. Bellow's Church were were rowed from. More varied and exquisite still are the shapes into which the rocks are thrown. The one great conspicuous object of the valley is a massive, two-sided wall, standing out into and over the meadow, yellowish-gray in color, and rising up into a sharp, unbroken, square perpendicular, for full three-quarters of a mile. It bears in Spanish and Indian the name of the Great Jehovah."

Of the Yo Semite Mr. BOWLES does not think it too much to say that no so limited space in all the known world offers such majestic and impressive beauty, and that only the whole of Switzerland can surpass it. Our Californian wonders of nature are certainly as well worth seeing as those of the older continents, and may be visited for half the expenditure of money and time necessary to take a traveler to Switzerland. All true lovers of the picturesque, before they go to Mont Blanc, should see the Yo Semite, in the midst of its towering Sierras. The present month is the fittest time of the year for that purpose, in our author's opinion.

Passing up from Sacramento, for fifty or sixty miles, on the new railroad which, when finished, will complete the route of six hundred and fifty miles to Portland, in Oregon, we are introduced to General BIDWELL, a pioneer of Californian life and an Ex-Congressman, who lives on his lordly estate of 20,000 acres at Chico; and also note Red Bluff, at the head of the Sacramento River, as the residence of John BROWN's widow and her three daughters—the former acting as children's doctress and nurse, and the latter as teachers in the public schools. Then going over the California line, we are carried through the tangling ridges of the Coast Range and the Cascade Mountain (the Sierras under a new name) into the grand Willamette Valley, which is to Oregon what the Sacramento Basin is to California. This valley constitutes the wealth and beauty of Oregon. Mr. BOWLES calls it a paradise valley, adding "never did I behold a more fascinating theatre for rural homes." The hills and valleys of interior Oregon furnish almost inexhaustible and continual pasturage. The climate is very moist—a complete contrast to that of California—and grass grows for the cattle all the Winter through. From this mild and exuberant State our author and his party travel up Puget's Sound to the Queen's territory at Victoria, where the Lord Mayor of that municipality had Mr. COLFAX and his friends to dinner, and where all differences on the subject of the boundary line through the Gulf of San Juan were easily and amicably settled—"ANDREW JOHNSON and Queen VICTORIA were happily married, and the two grand nations of the Anglo-Saxon race were joined in one overpowering and all-fructifying republic—and what a bloody republic it would be!" exclaimed an enthusiastic Briton at 1 o'clock in the morning."

Having thus performed in the extreme West what Mr. ANDREW JOHNSON was accomplishing in the East, our travelers turned down again along the coast, and passed up the stream of the far-traversing Columbia. We have descriptions of this river, and also of Idaho and Montana Territories and their mineral and other resources—the author adding some valuable information on Alaska and the Sandwich Isles, which were not visited. His long journey is concluded on the homeward route by the isthmus, which is very agreeably described. At the conclusion are a summing up and a timetable of distances, showing how, in sixty days, a thorough-paced lover of the picturesque could go from Omaha to Colorado, thence to the Salt Lake City, on to Nevada, then to San Francisco, away to Oregon, up the Columbia River, and so round by Idaho and the Shoshone Falls to the Salt Lake and Omaha again—making short stays and seeing everything worth exploring in that with expansion. A great many would like to do the thing at this rate—as a matter of pleasure. But our author suggests how a five-months trip would enable a man to go through it in an easier and more profitable manner, bringing back a wealth of recollections to last for a lifetime!

THE SYMBOLISM OF FREEMASONRY. By ALBERT G. MACKEY, M. D., New-York: CLARKE & MAYNARD.

Dr. MACKEY has, in our opinion, written the best book extant on this curious and controverted subject of Freemasonry—the Sphinx's riddle of our modern age—and not all ages, as well for it seems to be, beyond doubt, the same old conundrum which exercised the wits of Kirk Cingrus, presenting itself with a different nomenclature. He has in fact—not the "fourth Theban" just mentioned, but Dr. MACKEY—dived very deeply, and almost entirely the true explanation of that traditional puzzle, and put the "secret" as plainly out as discretion, the obligation of secrecy and the subject is a strangely interesting one; it was the theme of all antiquity, belonging to all parts of the world, but originating, apparently, in Asia Minor, where trace of it may yet be discoverable among the Rosicrucians of the hill regions of Kurdistan and other tribes. Indeed, it is curious to observe that neither Dr. MACKEY nor any of the other investigators of Freemasonry has ever noticed the fact that the Maronites of the Lebanon, whenever they wish to express their execration of anything, exclaim, "Freemasons!"—a word which is really their own, and not adopted from any Western vocabulary. The QUATREMERE, LA CROIX, and the rest, should have noted it and discovered in it the great Turkish festival of the Ramazan, an observance derived from the remotest antiquity, and corresponding with the Hebrew and the Christian Pasch, the Coptic Bide, the Celtic Jos, the Hudeshead of the Hindoos, &c. The Ramazan was an ancient festival, kept by the Pagan ancestors of those mountaineers; but, it has been dispensed among them, under that name, for ages—the same disparagement attending it in Europe, ever since the people had been induced to change their old ethnic notions. It may seem odd to the Freemason, of England, France, and America, to be told that their name, as they pronounce it themselves, was pronounced familiarly by the people who lived four or five thousand years ago, on the coasts and mountain plateaus of Asia. But we fancy the fact is true one, and that it strongly helps to maintain the probabilities of a high antiquity for that venerable Order.

Dr. MACKEY, in his own way, points out correctly enough the origin of Freemasonry, as it first appeared among the Noachites, and follows it to the Isiac, Eleusinian, Mithraic and other mysteries of Egypt, Greece and Asia. At the same time, he lays too great a stress upon the received idea that the early races of men worshipped the sun and moon. This is probably a very general mistake. A better investigation of the subject will show that the reverence for those heavenly bodies was confined to a small crowd of eclectics who superimposed it on the genuine old cult of the world, with the superior purpose of raising and purifying the ideas of the human race. The word Sabeism had two meanings, and one of them had nothing to do with the sun or moon, belonging rather to the root of Sabaoth, which meant "creation." But, in spite of the attempts of the Magi and other orders of superior men, the old cult was never entirely forgot, and its nomenclature may be still discovered in all the ethnic worships of men, in every quarter of the world, underlying the fancies of fire and every other sort of mythology to be found in books. The original reverence of man was plain and simple enough to be true, and was an undeniable truth. It was, in fact, the origin of Freemasonry, or as the Maronite mountaineers would write it, Fremasonery—a thing which indicated one of the greatest and most recognized laws of nature, and one that need not have been connected with that savage Parliament of execration. It showed that the early cult of men was not got from the skies,—a fact which was slurred over and covered up by the "mysteries" of well-meaning priests and philosophers, who, as VARRO and others admit, told the people a great many lies for the general good; and having once begun that fashion, continued and improved it. Still, it is undeniable that the world got along somehow, and rose from a lower level to a higher,—a conclusion, however, which will be controverted by a great many persons, as it has been. But we think it may be safely argued that the races of men are improving in everything. The forms and spirit of men's creeds and philosophies were growing better from the first, as may be seen in the various sects of the world. The moralities of the Buddhists, Turks, and Parsees are really very good things; and that old Freemason philosophy has also undergone a beneficent change. It is now one of the most humane and beautiful systems in the world—a system of brotherly help, kindness and love which is worthy of all praise, and carries with it the finest expression of Christianity. It is also good as one of the landmarks of the world's progress, showing how men's minds can raise themselves from low considerations and propensities to the higher levels of intellect and moral feeling. It makes the millennium a probability, and teaches people how to go "marching along" in that direction. It is no longer a thing to be execrated, having no longer anything terrible about it, and no hot poker to frighten weak imaginations.

Dr. MACKEY has to all intents and purposes set forth the Freemason's secret. It is no secret at all—when people come to think of it. And that being the case, the ladies may be allowed to enter the Lodges. Indeed, whether they may or not, we suspect they will, under the new and improved Charter of their rights and liberties; and we may at any moment be called on to witness a peremptory knocking at the gates of that grave old Order, and see a Grand Arch with his apron on trying verbal conclusions with a deputation from the Sorosis.

BEECHER'S SERMONS: First Series, 1868-9. 8vo. PLYMOUTH PULPIT.

This is a handsomely printed volume of 454 pages, containing selected sermons preached by Mr. BEECHER during the past Winter and Spring. It is prefaced by the best engraved likeness of the great preacher that we have ever seen, and is altogether a very complete and elegant volume. It is printed, we believe, from the plates of Plymouth Pulpit, the weekly pamphlet publication of the Plymouth Church services, so favorably known.

Mr. BEECHER's happy faculty of seizing the old truths and teachings of the Bible and deftly applying them to the wants of every-day life, is what gives him his constant, wide-spread and growing power. These are days of much turbulence and trouble in the moral and intellectual as well as in the political world. Science, striding along eagerly toward its much longed-for prize of comprehending the natural world, seems often to be overthrowing, or at best pretty severely jostling, the beliefs which have helped good men for many centuries. The supernatural is growing into disfavor; particularly as many enthusiasts, not content with a divine element overruling human affairs, are laboring to enforce a belief in the constant interference of the spirits of the dead in mundane matters—which neither the world-accepted Bible nor the world's common sense give reason to believe. The scientific reaction, therefore, has full swing just now. But men who, like Mr. BEECHER, calmly set aside the childish superstitions with which men have encumbered their beliefs, and who make it the aim of their study and their life to show the human adaptabilities of the Divine Book, the naturalness of the supernatural, and the earthly beauty and happiness to be found in the pursuance of heavenly teachings—these are men who at once win the respect of those who think, and the love of those who feel. They supply a want of the day.

Tragedy in Kentucky—A Wife Master Shot.

From the Richmond (Ky.) Register, June 18.

A horrible tragedy occurred near the late residence of the unfortunate subject of this sketch on Monday evening last. From all we can learn in regard to the affair it seems that DUD. DUNNAH was in the habit of mistreating and shamefully abusing his wife. Our informant states that on the evening above mentioned he had whipped her, and she had returned to the house of her father; (Mr. TOWNATTAN SHEARER, a worthy citizen of our county,) who accompanied by Mrs. DUNNAH and her brother, Mr. GEO. TIPTON, returned to DUNNAH's house the same evening. DUNNAH at first refused to open the door, but, learning that it was his wife, opened the door, stating that he would finish the [His language was too bad to go in print]. Mr. SHEARER informed him that he would attend to that matter, when DUNNAH drew a revolver, and was only prevented from shooting by his wife, who rushed between them. After some little conversation, DUNNAH seemed more calm, and informed TIPTON that a woman living about a mile distant was the cause of all the disturbance, and that if he would accompany him he would prove the fact and burn her house in the bargain. Both started for the house, but, when about halfway across the open field through which they had to pass, DUNNAH suddenly drew his revolver, telling TIPTON that he had him in the place he wanted him. The latter, in an instant drew a revolver and fired, the ball taking effect in DUNNAH's breast, who fell and expired without a struggle. His body remained in the field all night, and was removed the following morning.

IN MEMORIAM.

Further Expressions of the Press of the Country on the Death of Mr. Raymond.

From the New-York Star.

Elsewhere we give place to a meagre but conscientiously prepared sketch of the main features in the career of our dead friend and professional father, HENRY J. RAYMOND. Incorporeally grieved and shocked as we were by the sudden news of Mr. RAYMOND's death, we would be blind to fact if we failed to recognize in the blessed record he has left a consolation unspeakably great and gratifying—as a man he was truly great—for manhood is not measured by the head alone, but supremely by that happy combination of head and heart which was conspicuous in his organization, and a fit monument to his memory. As a journalist he was notably a success. With none of the adventitious circumstances which have made so many men successes attending him, he was from the first an honest, laborious, intelligent worker, who applied his part of himself, but entered heart and soul into the matter which occupied his immediate attention. Had he been content to wield the power of the pen alone, he would ere this have been the power of the land.

We hear nothing but kindness; nothing but higher praise; nothing but blessed benisons from all the Press, and as we look out upon the square, every flag hangs at half-mast, drooping, drooping, doleful. It was almost worth death to receive such evidences of regard. Respected universally, loved by all who really know him, Mr. RAYMOND went suddenly from the sanctuary of his active usefulness, and ere his children had recovered from the first cruel stun, they are overwhelmed by the tenderest offers of sympathetic sorrow.

The unalloyed exhibitions of our profession precluding the customary badges of mourning in our columns, but no more apparent, no outward semblance could add to our regard for him who has gone, or deepen the grief of our heart in the loss of a counselor, friend and prized associate. The community has lost a public-spirited citizen, a conscientious teacher, a catholic judge of affairs; and the nation has lost one of its clearest heads and truest hearts, while our profession cannot point to his equal in any of the several departments, the perfect working and harmonious blending of which he so thoroughly understood.

From the New-York Sun.

The sudden death of HENRY J. RAYMOND repeats with startling impressiveness the most familiar of lessons. But yesterday he was foremost in directing one of the chief powers of modern society. His influence was felt by thousands of minds. He bore his full part in shaping the policy and the acts of a great country. To-day what remains of him on earth is a clod and a memory; his soul, all of him that was vital, has passed into the appointed for all the myriads of men, whether those of us who remain—his associates, his comrades, his opponents sometimes, his friends always—must soon follow him, and follow perhaps with as little warning as was given him.

The circumstances of Mr. RAYMOND's death and the principal events of his life are described in another part of this paper. His actions were conspicuous, his qualities of mind and character remarkable. He gained distinction at an early age; he was but little more than 48 when he died. He graduated at the University of Vermont in 1840, and came at once to this City. Since then he has constantly been a prominent figure in the array of able and accomplished men who have made the metropolitan Press what it is. As the principal assistant editor of the Tribune and the Courier & Enquirer, and as the founder and for eighteen years the conductor of the TIMES, his reputation was established wherever newspapers are known. He was a writer of singular fertility and resources. His faculties were so much under his command, and his education was so comprehensive and so practical, that he could advantageously discuss a wide range of topics. As a controversialist it would not be easy to find his equal. His industry was incomparable, his intelligence quick and sure. Without the highest gifts of imagination, he was always clear, forcible and instructive; and he knew how to seize the controlling point of a question and present it so that the reader could not fail to understand and be convinced. His judgment was naturally moderate and conservative, free alike from the control of prejudice and of passion; and the intensity of conviction which usually passes into fanaticism, and is often dangerous to a public man, was not congenial to his mental organization.

With all his success in the profession of journalism, Mr. RAYMOND had a great predilection for the more active business of politics and legislation, and he repeatedly attempted that career. At times he seemed to be prosperous in it; but we doubt not he always regarded his efforts with a feeling of disappointment at last. He was repeatedly the Speaker of our New-York Assembly, and once was Lieutenant-Governor. He was a member of the memorable Thirty-ninth Congress; but having gone to the Convention held by the friends of ANDREW JOHNSON in Philadelphia in 1866, he became unpopular, and could not be reelected. His speeches in Congress were full of talent; but they were against the views of the majority, and he never carried with him either the House or the country. He did not fear to contend against the mass of the Republican Party in Congress, led by that redoubtable champion THADDEUS STEVENS. Against him Mr. RAYMOND fought fairly and not unskillful battle; but it was useless, and he afterward perceived that it had been a mistake. It was a battle in which he was predestined to defeat, in which the most brilliant generalship must, of necessity, be barren of all consequences. Since leaving Congress he has devoted himself to the journal with which he was identified, and, under his prudent and judicious management, as an organ of moderate Republican views, it has regained, or nearly so, the circulation it lost in that period of ardent political feeling.

But while he thus bore a manly, if not always a successful part in the encounters of political strife, it was in the sphere of the personal affections that he was most at home. His intimate friends were not very many, but they cherished for him a very strong attachment and confidence. We had very few indeed. He was rather cold in manner, but his heart was warm, sympathetic and pertinacious. No one who had any hold upon his esteem could demand of him any service and be refused. He was tolerant of his friends' shortcomings, and did not soon withdraw the regard he had once bestowed. His associates, rival or friends, in the field of journalism, joined to speak kindly and feeling words of the departed. "There is no journalist to take his place," says one; "the epitome of his power is written thus. There is no friend to take his place; the epitome of his kindness and loyalty is written thus." Another says: "His departure leaves a great and mourful void; and those who hearts are wrung by the sudden disruption of the tie that bound them to him cannot but lament as they stand beside his grave." And another: "Well will it be for the American Press and the American people if no journalist of equal ability and influence shall come in the future who shall by devote the one and exert the other than he whom we are called now to lay in what men call his 'untimely grave.' In the prime of life and in the midst of prosperity and apparent health, Mr. RAYMOND has passed from earth. Hopes, plans, the fruit of long years, the tribute of one of his contemporaries, many Winters and Summers will succeed each other, and the flowers that grow upon his grave will blossom and wither for many seasons before his existence will be forgotten by those who take an interest in the political affairs of the Republic. We can only now pay a slight tribute to his memory, and join with others in expressing regret at the death of a man whose abilities illustrated his profession, and whose personal qualities maintained its dignity.

From the Providence Herald.

In the sudden death of HENRY J. RAYMOND, editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES, the profession, as well as thousands of others, receive a shock which startles and saddens as though a personal friend had deceased. Mr. RAYMOND left his editorial rooms at 12 o'clock midnight, Thursday, and died of apoplexy at 8 o'clock on Friday morning. He was a man of more than more ordinary intellectual power, a ready writer, he had placed himself in the front rank of the editorial fraternity, and made the TIMES one of the best newspapers in the country. He was very far from being a mere partisan. Belonging to the Republican Party, he yet saw the damaged of the political issues pursued by that party, and was free in his criticisms upon it.

We saw Mr. RAYMOND in Philadelphia at the Convention of 1866, and was with him on the Committee upon Resolutions. Our readers will remember the able and statesmanlike address presented by that Committee, and it was impossible not to admire the talent, the magnanimity and the wisdom of that production. Since then time we have watched his paper closely, and have often been gratified by the sensible, broad and national views it has inculcated. Much of its doctrine we could most cordially agree, and have found in it so much of impartiality and candor that we have wondered how little impression it made for good upon its Republican coadjutors.

The TIMES, like every other paper edited by a man of ability, differed from all other papers. It is as unlike the Tribune as is the World. It is a manly paper. Mr. RAYMOND thought for himself, and possessed the independence requisite to the utterance of what he believed. He was, judging from his paper, a conscientious writer. He went to the root of things. Too sagacious not to despise, he was probably too proud to be a demagogue. Addressing himself to thinking men, he took none of the arts of the politician, but rested his case upon its merits, simply stating it eloquently. His loss will be felt outside of his party, for such a man was always entitled to attention when he wrote, whether one agreed with him or not, and all the more, perhaps, if one differed from him, because he was an antagonist it was not safe to ignore. Of his personal merits we know nothing, and writing without having seen the papers containing notices of his decease, we can only add that among public men he has left few, if any, superiors.

From the Providence Journal.

The last article that Mr. RAYMOND wrote was in defence of his old friend, Mr. SEWARD. It was a fitting close to his editorial labors, that his last sentences were those of kindness toward a venerable statesman, who retired, after twenty years' service in the Senate and in the State Department, and who has borne a leading part in the mighty changes that have swept over the country. Mr. RAYMOND, although he held a ready pen and was familiar with the keenest and most polished invective, always maintained a dignified and decorous style of controversy. The acrimony which disgraces a portion of the Press, the slang phrases and the personal allusions which are going on there in which so many papers abound, he repudiated more than anything else to degrade American journalism. Against them Mr. RAYMOND's course was a standing protest. No bitterness of attack, no misrepresentations of his motives and purposes, betrayed him into supplying ammunition to his adversary by his conduct. He was a gentleman and worthy of his position at the head of a great newspaper.

From the Indianapolis Journal.

Mr. RAYMOND was the author of the "Address" issued by the first Republican National Convention, held at Pittsburg in 1856, which nominated FREMONT. That "Address" set forth the grounds of the contest with singular ability, and furnished the new party with a document which it used with such striking effect, though without immediate success. In 1860 he worked zealously and effectively for the Republican ticket, and in 1864 was elected to Congress, where he pursued a rather Conservative course between the Radicals of the Thaddeus Stevens class and the more moderate Democrats. Since then his policy has followed very much the same track, always Republican, but not by any means unquestioningly partisan. Without attacking himself to Mr. JOHNSON's Administration, or becoming its apologist, he yet held aloof from the Republicans in their fierce and bitter opposition to it. He gave General GRANT a decided and earnest support, and he steadily discountenanced the disposition shown by some Republicans, and all Democrats, to depreciate the Chief Magistrate. He was rather conservative in temper, and felt a natural dislike of extreme men and measures, but he was never a halting friend or uncertain opponent. His views were clear, and his advocacy of them always sincere as well as able. He has left a void in journalism that hardly will be filled. His family is quite large and he was devotedly attached to it. His eldest son is said to exhibit in no small degree the talents of his father as a journalist and a writer, and we may hope that he will live to renew his father's services and honors. Mr. RAYMOND was quite wealthy, being the largest stockholder in the TIMES, and the owner of the magnificent building in which the paper is published. The particulars of his death will be found in our telegraphic columns.

From the Rochester Union.

The writer was acquainted with Mr. RAYMOND when he commenced his career in journalism, and his appearance did not then give promise of his subsequent brilliant career. He possessed in a remarkable degree the elements of industry, to these qualities were added ability and cultivation. His success in life was not adventitious, for he struggled against adverse circumstances, and only achieved success by eminent fitness for the profession he had chosen, and an indomitable will which "never knew" and yielded to the difficulties and obstructions which to one less gifted might have proven insurmountable. The TIMES bore the impress of Mr. RAYMOND's peculiar qualifications and abilities, as it was not second to either of the able journals of the City, from the date of its first issue. It offered $1,000,000 for the establishment, which he did not regard its value. How strange is death's doings. After a long struggle, and achieving preliminary success on both reputation and wealth, surrounded by everything that would make life desirable, he is cut down, and without warning he is gone. His life and death add one more illustration of the uncertainty of life and the vanity of the bubble reputation.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

We have to announce, to-day, the death of the Hon. HENRY J. RAYMOND, editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES. His death cannot fail to create a strong sensation throughout the United States and a sensation considerable only in Europe. In dying, he left few intellectual peers behind him. His was one of the guiding minds of our generation. He was a thinker, and he did much to mould the thoughts of others. He was an actor, and he constituted a power in the fashioning of the actions of the age.

We do not think, that, among living editors or among those who sleep as he now sleeps, we could name Mr. RAYMOND's superior. His pen was as keen as a razor and as ponderous as a battle-axe. Wherever it moved, it caught and reflected the sunshine or the lightning. Every sentence that he wrote was clear and classical, and his logic went to its mark with the precision, rapidity and penetrative power of a rifle bullet. His soul bore the noblest stamp of the spirit of the Divinity. He filled a peculiar place, which none of his survivors can fill. His name will long breathe and burn upon the air, and the world will justly deem itself the better for his having lived.

During the war Governor RAYMOND was among the ablest writers for the Union. After the war he became the great conservative leader of the Republican Party, and was the most powerful and well-written in favor of a liberal policy toward the South. He was elected to Congress in 1864, and served one term, taking a prominent part in the proceedings. He was the chief of the moderate Republicans, and, while he had not succeeded in inducing his party to adopt his counsels, it is too early to speak of his Congressional career as a failure. Two years ago he retired from Congress and has since devoted himself to the TIMES, which has shown rare marks of his workmanship.

Governor RAYMOND was a great worker. He performed during his life many wonderful newspaper feats. He was also a man of taste in belles-lettres and art, fond of society, devoted to foreign life and travel, and largely familiar with both.

From the Chicago Times.

As a journalist, Mr. RAYMOND had few or no superiors in the world. The present position of the NEW-YORK TIMES is the best possible evidence of his success as a journalistic manager. It is to-day the fairest, most influential and ablest Republican newspaper in the United States. As a writer, Mr. RAYMOND was finest and versatile to a most remarkable degree. An instance of his profound capacity for work is the fact that, at the time of HARRISON's death, he prepared for the next issue of the New-York Tribune an obituary notice of sixteen columns. It was not a mere collection of words, but an able, thoughtful, and exhaustive production.

In addition to industry, Mr. RAYMOND was gifted with a high order of ability, as a writer. For ten years he was connected with the HARPERS; and all of his efforts, while with them, were finished, chaste and scholarly. He was in Europe during the war between Austria and France, and his letters were models of descriptive power and fidelity of expression. He thus developed that rarest of all qualities, those which make a man at once a finished speaker and a superior writer.

A marked characteristic of Mr. RAYMOND was his finish as a gentleman. He had its perfection in an embodied form, which, without being high in rank, was clean, manly and expansive. He was one of those useful, practical minds that improve with age, and expand and strengthen with experience. By study, travel and intercourse with the world he had made himself a master in his profession. The high position attained by his industry, enterprise, perseverance, tact and ability. He made that journal one of the four leading dailies of the great American metropolis.

The honorable place to be filled in American journalism cannot be readily supplied—for few men possess that combination of qualities by which he was marked.

Mr. RAYMOND was the architect of his own fame and fortune, and will leave to his family a name of which they may justly be proud. His success was not confined to his profession. As a member of the New-York Legislature, Speaker of the popular branch of that body, Lieutenant-Governor of the State, and Representative from his District in Congress, he rendered signal service to his day and generation. Men of trances as intelligence, conscientious, painstaking and powerful are rare. Living, they deserve respect and affection; and dying, their memories deserve to be embalmed in the hearts of their survivors.

From the Wheeling (W. Va.) Register.

The telegraph brings us the unpleasant intelligence that Mr. HENRY J. RAYMOND, editor of the NEW-YORK TIMES, died yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. Mr. RAYMOND has long been known as one of the ablest men and most successful and influential editors in this country. His paper, the TIMES, has wielded a marked influence upon the policy of the Republican Party, and has exercised a great influence, also, upon the general American public, by whom its great merits have long been recognized. Mr. RAYMOND died suddenly, and in the very prime of life and usefulness; cut down when honors were thickening upon him and the future was brightest before him. With the exception of Mr. GREELEY, perhaps, we could be more pained from the editorial profession of our land than his; none more sincerely mourned by the reading public. His death is a national loss.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

Mr. RAYMOND was one of the most diligent and hard-working editors in the State, and was universally respected and honored, not only by the profession, but by the public.

His sudden death adds but another proof that the active journalists of this country are working themselves into premature graves, while the public, who enjoy the benefits of their toil, can scarcely be made to realize what a working channel-house the editorial profession is. The brilliant, intuitive and vivacious mind in many instances withstand the pressure, but the more delicate organization of the physical frame sooner or later gives way under the heavy pressure of the machinery within, and sinks down without a moment's warning. Such is the penalty for overtaxing the conscience, which most American journalists are compelled to pay.

From the Auburn News.

From the death of the first link in the succession of Appointees, Mr. RAYMOND was an energetic and earnest supporter of the war, striving faithfully with both voice and pen to inspire and keep courage in the Northern heart. Mr. RAYMOND was a member of the Thirty-eighth Congress, representing the 12th District of the State. His Congressional position, though creditable, did not meet the expectations of his party. He favored the Philadelphia Convention, and the address of that Convention to the people was drafted by him. Such was the ability Mr. RAYMOND has been called politically as a Conservative Republican, though both Mr. RAYMOND and the TIMES were among the most powerful and efficient advocates of the election of General GRANT.

As active politician, it is as a journalist that Mr. RAYMOND will be known to future years. He was a ready and r

MURDEROUS AFFAIRS.

Shooting and Stabbing Cases—Savage Assault by a Husband on His Wife—A Woman Scalped.

JAMES LYNCH was arraigned yesterday before Justice DOWLING, at the Jefferson Market Police Court, on a charge of shooting Lawrence GARIGAN. It was alleged in behalf of the prisoner that the shooting was accidental; and it was stated that Lynch had fired with the purpose of frightening away some boys who were engaged in breaking his windows at No. 36½ Downing-street, and was not aware of the presence of GARIGAN, who was close at hand at night watchman of a building in course of repair. The ball took effect in his right breast, and he was taken to Bellevue Hospital where he remained in a critical condition. LYNCH, who was arrested at the time of the occurrence by Officer BARNALLY, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct, was committed yesterday to await the result of the injuries thus recklessly, if not intentionally, inflicted.

An affray occurred yesterday morning between Pierce SCHAEFE, of No. 161½ West Twenty-fifth-street, and Philip RUNNEL, a shoemaker, during which the latter used a knife with such vigor that SCHAEFE was seriously wounded in the arm and hand. RUNNEL was arrested by Officer KEATING, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was arraigned before Justice DOWLING, and committed in default of $1,000 bail for trial at the General Sessions.

The most serious, however, as well as the most brutal, of the murderous affairs brought to the notice of Justice DOWLING, arose out of a quarrel between Robert WILKINSON, No. 108 West Sixteenth-street, who had been arrested by Officer CAMPBELL of the Sixteenth Precinct, by almost savage attack upon his wife, Ann WILKINSON. During Sunday a quarrel occurred between the pair in their room, and the husband, after beating and kicking his wife until she was black, bruised and mangled, actually tore her scalp from her head. Police Surgeon ALANSON E. JONES, who was called to attend the woman, stated in a communication to the Magistrate, that he found the skinned portion of the scalp torn off from the right side of the woman's face. He returned it to its place and stitched it on, but it is doubtful if it will adhere. If it should not, or if erysipelas should supervene, he gave it as his opinion, that the woman cannot recover, and the brutal husband was thereupon committed without bail to await the result of the injuries, notwithstanding the forgiving wife declared that she would never appear against him.

Base Ball—Atlantics vs. "Haymakers."

This game, played yesterday at the Capitoline, was cut short in the sixth inning by a heavy shower of rain, which completely delayed the field. The score at the end of the fifth inning was 21 to 4. In the sixth inning the Atlantics made 5. When the rain came up the "Haymakers" had made six runs, with the aid of only one hand. The umpire then called the game. The "Haymakers" were outplayed by their more skillful opponents, and seemed unable to get round the bases. In the sixth inning they became somewhat demoralized, but improved in the balance of the game.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

THE ADMIRALTY—MARITIME LIEN—MORTGAGE—WHEN TO BE RECORDED—CONFLICTING OF THE MARITIME LAWS.

White's Bank of Buffalo vs. The Proceeds of the Schooner Robert Bennett, Robert Smith Claimant.—Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New-York. Mr. Justice NELSON delivered the opinion of the Court, reversing the decree of the Court below, and a decree was entered in favor of the appellant.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

LIEN—BEARING OF VESSEL OVER MORTGAGE.

William H. Judah vs. The Bark Thales, her tackle, &c.—BEATTIE, J.—This suit was filed March 4, 1869, by the firm of D. M. & R. A. Wallack & Co. against the bark Thales, to recover a sum of money on the balance remaining due for certain repairs, supplies and advances, claimed to have been furnished at Pensacola, Fla., in the fall of 1868, by the firm of Hoyt, Pugsley & Co., commission merchants there, for the use of the bark, and on her credit. When the suit was brought the cloth belonged to R. M. & R. A. Wallack & Co. and it has since been purchased by William H. Judah, who has been substituted as libelant. One of the defenses set up in the answer is, that on the 5th of July, 1867, a libel was filed in this Court by R. M. & R. A. Wallack & Co. against the whole vessel, for the same cause of action; that the vessel was arrested by that suit and was duly discharged on a bond being given in due form; and that the bond of the vessel was discharged from the claim of that libel, and cannot be maintained against her. It appears that that the libel in the former suit was for $2,000, a forged check for $110 50, and a forged note for $2,000, drawn in the name of Jacob Southard, who in March following was declared a lunatic. The criminal complaint was supported solely on the affidavit of O. W. Newton, who swore that he saw Mr. Bache write the $2,000 check, to his own order, and sign it with Mr. Southard's name; that Mr. Bache then indorsed it over to Mr. Newton, and Newton took it to the Bank of Commerce, where he had an account; Judge Dodge rejected the criminal complaint on Newton's bill of exceptions. An affidavit of the same nature and the complaint in the case were the basis of the original libel in this case.

The defendant now moves to vacate the order of arrest. His own affidavit relates his case, and is in reply to a motion to a new trial, contained in the Commissioner's report, which was made in the Court below, and which was denied by the Court. He states that he was a friend of Jacob Southard, who was a lunatic; that he had been intrusted with the management of his business, and had been in the habit of taking bill to be used in the business, and of making checks in his name, in the handwriting of Bache.

The Court cites other affidavits of gentlemen acquainted with Mr. Southard, who testified that they did not, after his insanity, believe the signatures to the same checks to be his.

Mr. Van Wyck, in summing up for the plaintiff, after alleging his jurisdiction, claims, first, that Southard, a lunatic, by his guardian, Mason, Freeman and Chatfield, at liberty to contend with the defendants upon the merits; that the barring of the facts proves that the only point before the Court was not as to the transaction in every other respect, but whether the defendant had not forged the check; that from arrest on a mere preponderance of affidavits, but he was willing to submit a greater burden to show the forgery, evidence of testimony to be against the defendant.

Mr. Justice CARDOZO said that there was a technical point against the Court would not try the case, but would dismiss it, and would not try the case, the question was not, whether the check was forged or not, but whether the Court would be willing to give a verdict, the Court would be willing to put on bail or take common bail, or even accept the defendant's own recognizance.

Mr. Van Wyck then proceeded to argue that Mr. Bache's affidavit contradicted it in many points; Mr. Bache's affidavit contradicted it in many points; Mr. Bache's affidavit was modified and detailed, he probably at the point that while Mr. Bache says he signed check at Mr. Newton's, Mr. Newton says he showed it to bought it from him at twenty-five cents, or, this side was to be at forty cents. He called attention to other, and to witnesses, who testified that they knew the signature of Mr. Southard, and that the signature was known to be, as to the body, in Bache's handwriting. Mr. Van Wyck argued that the defendant was guilty, that the fact of the bank officer who was defrauded in paying the money, was sufficient to show that the defendant was guilty, and that the statements of a lunatic would not be received as proof of anything.

Mr. Van Wyck, in reply, said that the statement of the plaintiff was clear and straightforward, consistent with the probabilities and facts, and supported by the testimony of the defendant, the only other party who could know the transaction, the lunatic, who was the party most interested, in a total reversal of what he is now entitled to. The defendant's own affidavit, his signature, was notorious to all who had dealings with him, made several months of his habits, that there was no evidence of any account against the defendant; that the action brought against the defendant; that the action brought against the defendant; that the representations was itself a proof that there was no forgery, and that the proceedings were conducted in a spirit of persecution.

The Court reserved the papers.

Mr. Van Wyck, Mr. Freeman and Mr. Chatfield for plaintiff; Mr. H. F. Averill and Mr. Ira Shafer for defendant.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—BROOKLYN.

Before Judge Tappen.

Chas. A. P. Bergeman vs. John Farrell, Jr.—The plaintiff sued to recover damages in the sum of $5,000 for the death of his wife, who was killed under the following circumstances: About the 6th of June, 1864, a wagon containing the plaintiff, his wife and another person came into collision with a truck owned by John Farrell & Co., Gallifert, doing business in the Eastern District, with so much violence that the wife of the plaintiff was thrown out and so severely injured that she died in five days afterward. Twenty-one days after the death of Mr. Bergeman, the plaintiff, on the estate, John Farrell, the principal of the firm, having died in the meantime, and he brought the present action to recover damages in the sum of $5,000, under the statute, for the loss of his wife.

The defence was that John Farrell, Jr., although his name was in the firm when his father was alive, was only nominally a partner, and that he was in fact only an employe, and got one-fifth of the profits of the business for the performance of certain stipulated services, and that he was simply a clerk to his father, until he became 21 years of age, and then had his father allowed his name to be used in the firm, but he had no control whatever over the action of any of the employes of the firm, either in hiring them or in discharging them, and finally that the man who was the driver of the truck, and who, by mere accident, was an employe of his father and not of his, and had been so for years before defendant's name was put in the firm.

Judge Tappen, for the defence, moved for a new will on the above grounds, which was not granted, and the case went to the jury, being summed up by C. T. Cooke, plaintiff's, and Judge Moore for defence. The jury gave a verdict of $1,500 to the plaintiff.

SUPERIOR COURT—TRIAL TERM.

Before Justice Freedman.

A SUBMAN LOVER BRAVELY FIRED.

Emily A. Scobeyer, by her Guardian, vs. Fredk. William Dunie.—This is a suit for breach of promise of marriage. A few days ago a suit was tried by the father of the plaintiff for seduction on the same facts, and the jury gave him a verdict for $5,000. In both cases the defendant failed to appear, and in both cases the plaintiff's story was substantially this: The young man, a German, came to the house of the young lady's parents, was well received, courted, and finally, by the consent of her parents, engaged to be married. Subsequently, the parents objecting, but finding on a delay of the marriage the girl was eighteen. Before that time she met him accidentally, was evening in the house of the house he delayed his particular, and finally closed, the door in her or other, the other door. The young lady received nothing more till she awoke some hours after to find herself in a strange place, and was informed by her parents, and the defendant was arrested. His promise of marriage were then so strong that friends of the plaintiff came forward and offered bail for his release, and he fled to Europe. The bail, of course, were released.

The jury found for the plaintiff $7,500.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

Before Judge Curtiss.

PROCEEDINGS IN THE MARINE COURT—THE CASE OF CAPTAIN MILLS.

John Fallon vs. Casey et al.—This is the action already reported, in which John Fallon and Captain Mills and Officer Casey for false imprisonment, and got a verdict for six cents damages against each. A motion was made on Saturday for a new trial on the Judge's minutes, which has also been reported.

Yesterday Judge Curtiss delivered his decision on this latter motion, as follows:

The motion is made for a new trial upon the Judge's minutes. The ground of it was, that the verdict was totally inadequate to compensate the plaintiff for the injury received at the hands of the defendants. It was also urged in behalf of the defendants that the motion should not be granted. First, because irregular in form. This ground has no strength, and is therefore ignored. Second, that the plaintiff's counsel, in his opening, had stated to set aside a verdict upon the minutes of the Judges was unconstitutional in a constitutional provision, so far as that objection is concerned, the practice had been established by a long series of decisions under the act of the Legislature making the Code provision relative to new trials applicable to this Court. I do not deem it necessary to add a single word to the decisions either pro or con on that question. The only question is: Is it a case coming within any one of the three provisions of the Code of Procedure relative to new trials? Is it a case in which the judgment of the Supreme Court that it does not. It must be remembered that this motion is made by plaintiff's counsel to set aside a verdict in his own favor, and consequently cannot be within the clause of the Code referred to, as the opinion, in any case where, or proved in a comparatively recent case by Mr. Justice Emott, in the Marine, Chambers, denied, and the Court is led to infer from the fact that the verdict in this case, in the opinion of the counsel, will be the proper amount of damages, and that the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted, because the jury, in the opinion of the counsel, have given a verdict for too small a sum. I do not think that the Court ought to set aside a verdict for the mere reason that it is not large enough, and that the Court, if it should be of opinion that the verdict is too small, should be of opinion that the verdict should be increased, and that the verdict should be increased, and that the verdict should be increased, and

The most important event of the fortnight in Venezuela had been the issue of a circular by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, announcing the closing of the port of Maracaibo to foreign trade. It would seem that General FULGAR, President of the State of Zulia, whereof Maracaibo is the capital, has been acting the autocrat of that important seaport. He disposed of the Custom-house dues as he thought fit, without giving accounts to the chief Government in Caracas, and without remitting a due proportion of funds toward the State expenses.

A four-story brick store and dwelling in Market-street, Wilmington, Del., fell to the ground on Saturday morning. The family who lived in the upper part had a narrow escape from death. The father, a colored man named FERRY TRUITT, porter in the store, heard the building crack, and understanding the meaning of the sound, rushed up stairs, caught the children in his arms, and calling to his wife to follow him, hurried down. Just as the landing was reached the building fell, a mass of ruins.

Receipts of beef cattle are rather too heavy for the requirements of an active market. Sellers declared, yesterday, that trade was very dull. The best bullocks were being sold at 14c.@15c. ℔ lb., net weight, with a small number at 15½c. Common to fair steers were sold for 13c.@14c. ℔ lb. Hundreds of rough oxen and thin Texan steers were sold for 11½c.@12c. ℔ lb. Buyers and sellers frequently parleyed a long time before they could agree as to prices. In most instances, sellers were obliged to yield to the prices asked by buyers. Receipts of sheep are heavy, and most droves were sold at depressed prices. Fair droves were sold for only 5c.@5½c. ℔ lb., live weight. Selected sheep in small droves brought 6c. ℔ lb. and upward. Small retail lots of the best were sold for 7c.@7½c. ℔ lb., gross weight. Lambs were easy at 9c.@11c. ℔ lb., gross weight, with occasional small lots above 11c. Swine are heavy at depressed prices. Live are worth, nominally, 9c.@9½c., with selected small lots at 9¾c.@10c. Corn-fed dressed sell slowly at 11½c. ℔ lb., with small selected lots a fraction of 1c. above 11½c. Prices are tending downward.

"He Being Dead Yet Speaketh."

Contemporary opinion has rarely pronounced a more unanimous, more cordial or more emphatic judgment than in the case of the departed chief of the NEW-YORK TIMES. The lapse of years is usually essential to the formation and expression of just and generous estimates of character whose record is associated with the warfare of politics. Quickly spoken eulogy as applied to public men too often invites detraction, and not until the mollifying influence of time has done its work are we accustomed to look for careful discrimination in regard to motives and purposes, or for general appreciation of busy life and its results. The testimony elicited by the death of Mr. RAYMOND is therefore as exceptional as it is gratifying. Stricken down in the midst of his usefulness, the grave has not closed over his remains ere contemporaries of every shade of politics unite in the recognition of his goodness as a man, his integrity as a politician, and his surpassing excellence as a journalist. There has been no hesitation or delay; no waiting for the abatement of jealousies or for the more correct interpretation of a criticism in which the irritation engendered by controversy has no place. Death carries off his prize, and on the instant the Press of the country declares its loss. If anything could mitigate the grief of relatives bereaved or reconcile coworkers to the absence of his guidance and help, it should be this prompt and universal acknowledgment of the value of his labors, and the spirit and aims by which they have been controlled.

These expressions of opinion are rendered more valuable by the discriminating tone which pervades them. The testimony, though uniformly kindly, is more or less analytical. It is tendered from different stand-points. Those who in the political world have been opponents, naturally approach the story of his life and worth from another position than that occupied by his friends and political associates. The circumstance invests with additional interest the commendation so freely bestowed, and brings into greater prominence the goodness and fruitfulness of a career which thus wins from all admiration and respect. That a man's allies in public life, or his friends in professional and private intercourse, cover his grave with flowers, is an incident neither new nor surprising. But in this instance the manifestations of sorrow and respect are circumscribed by none of these relationships. The Press as a body laments the removal of one of its brightest ornaments. And the public, through the Press, deplores the loss of one of its justest, wisest counselors, one of the most vigilant and effective guardians of its interests, and one who, as a private citizen, earned naught but gratitude and good-will.

The demonstration of feeling is not explained by reference simply to Mr. RAYMOND'S abilities and accomplishments as a journalist, or the tireless industry with which he prosecuted the duties of his profession. The fact of professional success and the causes of it are conceded without qualification or reserve. In warm, ungrudging terms, his title to an elevation every step toward which was fairly conquered and worthily held, is recorded by his contemporaries. But more than admiration for his abilities is apparent in the encomiums heaped upon his memory as a newspaper conductor. Running through the volume of eulogy which are spread before us, it is not difficult to trace the appreciation of the service he rendered to the Press as an institution, and the editorial body as a profession, by the cultivation of a high tone in the discussion of current topics, and the maintenance of a standard befitting the opportunities and responsibilities of journalistic life. He proved that earnestness in controversy is not irreconcilable with courtesy—that the vigorous and faithful performance of assaying duties is not incompatible with consideration for personal character, with candor and truthfulness, or with respect for the principles and purposes of opponents. No lesson was more needed in newspaperdom, and the sedulous inculcation of it by Mr. RAYMOND is one of the secrets of his widespread influence. The weight of his example in this respect is freely admitted. And the effect of his teaching will keep alive the remembrance of the substantial service he rendered to the profession he adorned.

The sympathetic allusion to his characteristics and career as a public man show that in this respect also, the public has quickly realized the loss it has sustained. The voice of the stern critic is hushed; the opponent of yesterday takes his place among the friends of to-day. Misunderstood very often in life, in death the uprightness of his judgment is on all hands declared. It is now seen that difference of opinion to him meant not caprice, but fidelity to his own sense of truth and duty; that if he sometimes hesitated in following the leadership of others, it was because he accustomed himself to look at all sides of a question, and so became unable to concentrate his attention on the single point of the partisan. Moreover, his course is estimated rather by its general purpose than by incidental causes of controversy—by the purity of his motives and the excellence of his aim rather than by the methods of action preferred by others. He was in some measure a law unto himself, and the key to its interpretation comes with his death. His devotion to patriotic duty, his constant desire to moderate the rancor of party politics, his unselfish anxiety to heal the wounds of war and politics, are features of his career which death cannot touch. The lesson they teach is not the poorest part of the legacy he has left to the TIMES and the country.

The House of Lords.

We cannot imagine that there is any member of the Upper House in England to whom the position which that Chamber now occupies in reference to its legislative functions is perfectly satisfactory. It is still, constitutionally, coordinate in Parliamentary government with the House of Commons, but as a matter of fact it is fast subsiding into insignificance. When an unimportant measure has to be passed, the Lords may be left to come to a decision upon it without exciting much attention. But as soon as any bill containing a principle which the nation prizes reaches the House, the peers are at once subjected to the "screw." They are threatened with a coup d'état. They are warned that if they dare to exercise a discretion of their own in opposition to the will of the people they will find themselves summarily abolished. Hitherto a leader of the House of Commons has always been contented to threaten a large creation of peerages; and it will be remembered that this menace subdued the Lords in the Reform struggle of 1832, and again in 1848. But now, instead of increasing the number of members, the popular leaders talk of pulling down the House itself. "If you dare to go against us," they say, "we will raise a storm before which you must inevitably be swept away. You exist only upon sufferance, and while you are inoffensive, and keep yourselves properly in the background, we may not attempt to deprive you of the foolish pleasure which you derive from sitting on a red bench in a gilded chamber. But the moment any measure is sent to you upon which you would really like to express an opinion, we require you to be silent, or vote against your principles. Either course will satisfy us, only adopt one—or else go out of existence as a Legislative Chamber altogether." When these rescripts are sent forth to men who in their own counties are still kings, we cannot wonder that signs of resistance should occasionally be made. Perhaps some of the Lords think that the coup d'état would be preferable to the humiliation which they are in these days doomed to undergo. Hence the recent demonstration against the Irish Church bill, and what some may regard as the obstinate folly of Lord DERBY and Lord CAIRNS. The English Liberal papers tell them they invite revolution. Their answer is, "We only do the duty which the Constitution enjoins upon us. If there is to be a revolution, on your heads be the responsibility."

The advantage of a second Chamber in legislative work has often been questioned, and in the midst of events such as are now being accomplished in England, it would be difficult to convince the people that their own direct representatives are not sufficient to transact all the business of the nation. England, whether her public writers choose to admit it in so many words or not, is now passing through an era of revolution, and one "ancient institution" after another is probably destined to fall, or be materially changed, before we have seen the end of it. No doubt it is a silent revolution. There is no bloodshed, chiefly because there is no impediment to be overcome. The people have not a despot on the throne, with a vast army at his back, to fight against. The Crown has long since withdrawn itself from public affairs. The Lords endeavor now and then to "stem the tide of democracy," but it is like Mrs. Partington trying to keep back the Atlantic with a mop. They proclaim resistance, but generally succumb after a little bluster from the Radicals. If, then, people are disposed to wonder at the quietness with which the new revolution in England is carried on, they should ask themselves why there should be any great commotion? There is no obstructing force to meet. The wealthy and upper classes may, indeed, exclude workingmen representatives from the House of Commons, but this merely shows the power of money. They are obliged to speak and vote much as workingmen would do if they had seats in the House. They are compelled to be "Radicals." The landed proprietor is obliged to swear allegiance to Mr. GLADSTONE, who is now but an echo of Mr. BRIGHT. Most of these squires would have been glad to see Mr. BUSSOTT tied to the stake. But they dare not mildly criticise him now.

Naturally, then, the House of Lords is practically superseded. The people have been called to decide how the country shall be governed, and they are not disposed to play second to the representatives of rank. The Lords, in great emergencies, recognize the intrinsic weakness of their position, and simply evade a conflict with the Lower House. If a measure is sent to them of which they disapprove, like the Irish Church bill, they generally stop away from the House until it has been hurried through. This is not a dignified course; no circumstances can make it so. But it saves the House from becoming very odious to the people. And there can be no doubt that this state of subjection is strictly in accordance with the spirit of the English Constitution, however much it may seem to conflict with its theory, as that theory is commonly understood. It is inconceivable that a free people should place the balance of power in the hands of a class who have no pretensions to it but the possession of artificial rank. A man may be made a peer for very eminent services, but his son, a remote descendant, may turn out to be a fool, or a mere reckless gambler. There have been cases enough of that kind seen very recently in England. Yet the heir possesses all the ruling power in the House of Lords which the great ancestor could ever exercise. This arrangement has nothing to recommend it. If all Lords were like the Marquis of SALISBURY people could admit that they were fit to take a very important share in the work of government. But the Duke of NEWCASTLE is a fatal set-off against the Marquis of SALISBURY. The people say: "In times past our forefathers were little better than the serfs of these noblemen, many of whom gained their honors by disreputable means, by pandering to the worst passions of the Sovereign, by lying, scheming and cheating. We are now free to choose whether we will be governed by the same class, and we say no. We will govern for ourselves." This is the spirit which prevails more and more in English public life. The House of Lords represents nothing which the people greatly value or respect. This fact shows how inappropriate are the comparisons which are sometimes made between this Chamber and the Federal Senate. The Senate does really represent every State in the Union, and is practically elected by the people, although by a double, and as many eminent men have thought, a needlessly complicated contrivance. There is a community of feeling between the American people and the Senate—a warm current still runs from one to the other. But the House of Lords is separated from the English people by strong walls. It has less and less sympathy with them every year. The people wish for democratic changes, and the Lords hate democracy. The workingmen are rising to great political power, and the Lords would keep such men in "their proper places"—that is, to their workshops. They are in conflict with that potent factor known as the "spirit of the age." We very much doubt whether the revived project of creating "life peerages" would produce any substantial alteration in their situation.

In considering the changes which are still impending over English institutions, we may safely leave out of our calculations the House of Lords. All that it can do by resistance is to accelerate the movements which it fears. If anything had been wanting to render the Irish Church bill certain to pass, it would have been the opposition of the Lords. The people would have interpreted the issue in this way: "Shall the House of Lords, or the House of Commons—the aristocrats or the people—govern Great Britain?" And no one can reasonably doubt what answer would have been returned. It will be the same when the measure for the disestablishment of the English Church is brought forward. When the House of Commons decide in favor of any such measure, we may know that a little sooner or later it will become law. Under these circumstances we can all understand, and perhaps sympathize with, the wish of some able Lords to be extinguished politically rather than to occupy so anomalous a position in the State.

Annexation in Large Cities.

Boston and Dorchester are to vote to-day on the question of annexing the latter city to the former. The matter has been fully canvassed, maugre the intervening excitement regarding the Jubilee, and both the friends and the foes of annexation in both cities are confident of victory. We should say that, with a full vote, the annexationists would be in a decided majority. For, the people of Boston have an honorable civic ambition to grow great, and being unable to satisfy this ambition in the New-York way, namely, by natural growth within the corporation limits, they seek to compass it in the Philadelphia way, namely, by annexing all the surrounding towns. And, just as Philadelphia has "enlarged her borders" by grasping everything willing to be annexed for many miles around the city proper, so Boston has become so well satisfied with her seizure of Roxbury, that she is now quite ready, apparently, to swallow successively Dorchester, Charlestown, Brookline, Brighton, Cambridge, Jamaica Plain, and so forth and so on—beginning to-day, if agreeable, with Dorchester.

This policy is often a wise one. What it accomplishes is to give a city the benefit of the residence and citizenship of those large, all-powerful, and valuable classes who transact their business in it but reside in its suburbs; and, on the other hand, in return, it furnishes to these last some benefits of civic improvements and means of metropolitan enjoyment. In old times, a man who removed eight or ten miles away from the centre of trade, expected to sever many of the social and public ties which bound him or his family to city life, and he usually ceased to have much special interest in the public and personal condition of the city society he had left, supplying its place with new local attachments. But, with our modern means of swift inter-communication by steam and horse railroad, and the gradual building up of the space between our old cities and what are now only rural environs, all this is changed. The suburbs of a great city are merely bed-chambers and resting-places for its population—even as Brooklyn, though a great city, is mainly a dormitory for New-York. How many people who live in Brooklyn and do business in New-York are half as much interested in the City Government, for example, of the former, on which they have a vote, as in that of the latter, on which they do not vote at all? Or in the public amusements of the former city as in those of the latter? Or in the public enterprises and prosperity of the former, strictly so considered—i. e. independently of personal interests—as in those of the latter? And if this be true in the case of so great a city as Brooklyn—probably the third in population in the Union—how is it with the clusters of little outlying villages, to which, from one cause or another, New-York families have of late years so largely removed?

Very evidently, the local feeling and pride, and even the local distinctive character which many of these little places once had, are no longer so marked. They are merely the outlying posts of great cities, and in the cities the public thought, interest, and spirit of their various populations are mainly concentrated. For this reason, the question of formally annexing such places to the cities on which they so closely depend, is merely one of mutual interest and convenience. We may possibly see the day when the whole southerly region of Westchester County shall become New-York, and when from territorial increments, as well as from immigration and natural increase by births, the City population will mount to five millions.

Mill and Bushnell on Female Suffrage.

It is a fortunate thing that the discussion of one of the most serious questions of the age has at length been taken out of the hands of platform-spouters and rather weak young women, and has been carefully taken up by two of the leading spirits of England and America.

STUART MILL is now confessedly the foremost intellect in the field of both abstract and economic investigation in Great Britain. No one has done more in Europe to clear up to the popular mind, the science of political economy, and no living writer has better analyzed the proper functions of government. His researches in philosophy and metaphysics have aided to form a school of thought which exerts now a prodigious influence over the intellect of England. His recent career as a practical legislator and reformer has increased the popular interest in whatever he writes or says; and his well-known profound sympathy with our Union, and with all that is first in America, makes him listened to even more attentively here than in his own country.

He approaches, however, in his present theme, "The Subjection of Women," a subject on which he has thus far contributed but little to the thought of the age. It is one, also, not entirely adapted to his genius. It is doubtful if he has studied the influence and interplay of social and personal forces, as he has economic or metaphysical principles. Nor is the study of the historical derivation of the institutions and customs of this day as much his field as many other branches of investigation. He enters on the matter, however, with a zest and fire which alone will make his book read wherever the question of woman's position and rights is even thought of, and he treats it, it need not be said, with a style as limpid and clear as is his usual current of thought.

His opponent, Rev. Dr. BUSHNELL, is a clergyman well known among religious thinkers through both England and America. Though not a logician, like Mr. MILL, he has the intuition of genius, and often sees at once conclusions which the slow reason of investigators is long in reaching. His field is especially the analysis and comprehension of personal character, of the profound moral forces of human life; his imagination is one of the highest and purest which has ever been shown in theological and religious writing, and his style in our judgment is unequaled by any American sermonizer. Fortunately, for his treatment of this subject, he has a wide and liberal estimate, possessed by few clergymen, of the social power which may be wielded by women, both in dress, art, literature and society. He enters on the subject too with a profound interest; and his title is as bold as his antagonist's "Women's Suffrage; or, the Reform against Nature."

Singularly enough, the logician does not show as much art in the first presenting of his case as the clergyman.

Mr. MILL, who evidently writes under a strong personal feeling, is too hot in the beginning and plunges at once into his conclusion, calling women immediately "slaves," and alluding to them as "slaves" in repeated instances, so as rather to offend the unbiased reader, by being forced to a conclusion for which he is not at all prepared. Dr. BUSHNELL, on the other hand, with more rhetorical skill, admits the many wrongs and injustices practiced against women, avows his readiness to give them under marriage all and entire possession of their property and protect them in it, and is quite willing that they should enter many professions and pursuits now closed to them. But all this he allows, in order to give more force to his conclusion, of the great and terrible damage threatened to society from admitting them to the right of suffrage. We have not space here to give the points of his argument. They are certainly most serious and weighty; powerful, however, mainly as profound and deep-reaching statements rather than logical arguments. They rest mainly on the point which Mr. MILL most contests, or at least maintains is not proven, "the subject nature of women," not an inferior nature, but such a constitution as unfits her to govern. Dr. BUSHNELL dreads most of all the unsexing woman by this reform, or stimulating her unnaturally, so as to destroy her charm, and tend to weaken marriage. Mr. MILL, on the other hand, maintains that no legislation can change nature, and that we do not know yet what woman's nature is; and that her higher intellectual and political position will tend to make marriage what in the most civilized countries it now is rapidly approaching—a partnership between equals.

MILL seems to have somewhat wandered from the true history of law in making woman's subjection in marriage a relic of slavery; it is, as is well known, rather a relic of tutelage, or the patria potestas—the father's power. After his opening, however, the great English philosopher's presentation of his theme is exceedingly subtle and powerful. His account of woman's position in marriage under English Common Law is one of the most vigorous statements ever made of this matter. The relations of the man and woman under the "subject theory" are analyzed with remarkable skill, and the picture of man given—especially of the British husband—will startle American readers.

His reasons for allowing absolute equality to women under law and custom and politics are exceedingly strongly put, so that the grand case of Women's Suffrage seems now fairly laid before the jury of the civilized world by these two great advocates.

MINOR TOPICS.

After Mr. RAYMOND'S death there was found lying on his desk an unfinished editorial paragraph referring to Major-General MCDOWELL, probably the last words that flowed from his pen. It breaks off abruptly, leaving the sentence incomplete, as if the writer had been suddenly interrupted at his work and called away;—a sadly suggestive incident.

President SARMIENTO, in his Address to the Congress of the Argentine Republic, shows that, with all his moderation and philanthropy, he is resolutely bent on having LOPEZ, of Paraguay, put down and a Provisional Government established in his stead—being perfectly in accord with the Emperor of Brazil on that subject. It tells against LOPEZ to have a man like SARMIENTO so strongly opposed to him—to say nothing of the young Compte D'Eu, who is Commander-in-Chief of the Brazilian forces, organizing the army and raising squadrons of horse to make a dash upon the retreat and stronghold of the enemy. LOPEZ is evidently in a critical position; but he will probably send back a great many of those cavalry saddles empty before they can put him out of the combat.

In other columns of the TIMES this morning our readers will find further expressions of that respect and sympathy and warm appreciation which the death of Mr. RAYMOND has evoked from the Press in every part of the country. They will be read with melancholy interest.

The immigration of Chinese and Japanese to our Pacific border promises to be as important a fact as that of the European on the Atlantic side, and at the same time a more embarrassing one. The wonderful incursion of the Asiatics—twelve hundred of them in the last trip of the Great Republic—disturbs a great many, who never thought our going to China and Japan, and our announcements of a cosmopolite fraternity would have such results. But we cannot adopt the old exclusive policy of the Japanese and Chinese, and bid these people stay away or go away. They will come; and our citizens will, no doubt, get used to them—with their almond eyes and their sallow complexions. Civilization tends to do away with human antipathies and jealousies of race, and it is a tendency that our progressive people cannot long resist.

The newspapers yesterday noted the fall of one end of the ferry bridge at the foot of Barclay-street, on the day previous. The "accident" was caused by the breaking of a worn-out chain by which the bridge was suspended. Fortunately, it occurred at a time when few persons were on the bridge, else many lives might have been lost. It seems to us that the Board of Health would render the community excellent service by inspecting all the ferry bridges within the Metropolitan District, at once, with the view of compelling these corporations to render public travel safe.

Marshal SERRANO has promised to respect the Constitution and liberties of Spain; General PRIM has announced that disorder is to be suppressed, even should the Government be compelled to be "hard, inflexible, and even cruel;" and the DUKE DE MONTPENSIER has been specially permitted by a vote of the Cortes, supported by PRIM, to remain in Spain; and a conspiracy for the restoration of Queen ISABELLA has been discovered in Grenada. What all this may mean it is not easy to say, but the tenor of the news is on the whole satisfactory. If the Constitution is to be obeyed, disorder suppressed, and Isabellian conspiracies put down, it is clear that Spanish prospects are improving.

We are glad to learn that the Hansom Cab Company, lately organized in this City, will soon be in active operation. The Superintendent has gone to London to purchase three hundred cabs, which will be running in our streets within a short time; the remainder will be built at the workshops of the Company in this City. Our citizens will find these light and handy vehicles a great convenience.

The Boston musical feast of St. Cecilia has lost its monstrous proportions; but it will probably be drawn out in supplementary concerts and other entertainments of a less pretentious style, but more enjoyable on the whole. The great hall, being up, may do more good service before its removal—if they intend to remove it. It was altogether a well-managed affair—rather "loud" in its general effect, but popularly and financially considered, a success—and, as Lord NELSON, the English Admiral, often said, "success covers a multitude of faults." Whenever we, outsiders, undertake to get up a glorious enormity of that sort, with anvils and artillery, we hope we may put it through with as much good generalship and popular satisfaction.

The friends of the Lay Delegation movement in the Methodist churches are beginning to be anxious about the final result of the elections which are now being held throughout the country. The leading churches of this City have all voted against the proposition, and so have many others throughout the States. If successful, it will, doubtless, be a very slight victory, in point of numbers. The facts will be known, however, within a few days hence.

It was, no doubt, a very unpleasant thing to think we could not meet the expectation of the Danish Government in the negotiation for St. Thomas; but when we hear of the insular earthquakes, we cannot be altogether sorry we have not bought the place. About a fortnight ago another of these came, to fright the isle from its propriety, obliging a great many of the people to quit their houses and live in tents. With these concussions, the buildings necessary for American business would be in perpetual danger. A quiet population of native may go through earthquakes by watchfulness mixed with resignation; but our active commercial people might find it very hard to get along with them.

WASHINGTON.

The Meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment as the Next Census—Mr. Reverdy Johnson's Bill for Telegraphing—Appointments in the Third Brooklyn Revenue District.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, June 21.

During the recent sessions of the Census Committee in this city there was quite a long and careful discussion and examination of the bearing of the Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment on the next census, and the duty of the Committee, under its provisions, in maturing the necessary details for the next enumeration of the population of the country. The primary and constitutional duty of Congress in taking the census, and of the Committee, the mere agent of Congress, is to number the people for the purpose of making the required apportionment of representatives in Congress. All other statistics and figures are legally mere secondary objects, although it is popularly supposed that they are the first and only considerations. The Fourteenth Constitutional Amendment provides, among other things, that when the right to vote at any elections for the choice of Electors for President and Vice-President, Representatives in Congress, he., is denied to any of the male inhabitants of a State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State. Under the operation of this amendment, which is now part of the Constitution itself, the Committee will necessarily have to ascertain what States exclude any portion of their citizens from the right to vote for causes other than participation in the rebellion or crime. For instance, it will be necessary to ascertain the number of citizens in Massachusetts who are excluded from voting under the educational qualification. The same thing will have to be done in Rhode Island. In all States where for any cause the right of male citizens to vote is in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation in those States shall be reduced, as provided in said amendment, in the proportion which the number of the disfranchised class bears to the whole population. According to the letter and spirit of the law, it is thought that Rhode Island will lose one Representative, Kentucky probably two, New-York one, and so on in the other States. If the Fifteenth Amendment shall have been ratified before the taking of the census, it will of course alter the complexion of the case in some of the States. The Committee, after a consideration of the whole subject, and after an affirmative verbal decision from the Attorney-General, came to the conclusion that it was incumbent on them to make provisions for ascertaining the number of people in the various States where discrimination in the matter of voting is made against citizens, leaving out of view altogether the probable effect which the ratification or rejection of the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment may have on the subject. The Committee are of the opinion that the Fourteenth Amendment will affect the apportionment. It must, of course, be altered, and it must stand at the decreased figure for the next ten years. It will be observed that the basis of the representation of the Southern States is not changed, because there, although the participants in the rebellion do not vote, they nevertheless count, and go to swell the figures on which the allotments are to be made.

MR. REVERDY JOHNSON'S ACCOUNTS.

The accounts of Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON, Ex-Minister to England, were audited a few days ago at the Treasury Department. His telegraph bill for the three months ending March 31 amounted to $950 in gold. This was exclusive of the large bill which was presented some time ago for cable telegraphing in reference to the celebrated protocol which the Senate rejected, and which has been paid by BARING BROTHERS on the order of the State Department. Mr. JOHNSON'S contingent expenses during the same period amounted to $1,567, which is considered moderate. The contingent expenses of Minister DIX, at Paris, for a similar period amounted to $2,200. The comparison of both items will show that Mr. JOHNSON was not, after all, so very extravagant.

THE THIRD BROOKLYN REVENUE DISTRICT.

Mr. MICHAEL SCANLON, Assessor of the Third Brooklyn District, had an interview with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to-day, in which he informed Mr. DELANO that it was his intention to put an end to unlawful practices of unprincipled parties in the District and to secure a rigid enforcement of the revenue laws. Mr. DELANO gave him assurances of support in the matter, and at Mr. SCANLON'S request approved the following appointments:

Second Division, Jas. Hanley vice Wm. B. Barton; Third Division, Albert G. Allen vice Geo. D. Weeks; Fourth Division, Adrian V. Bergen vice Lake C. Ryder; Fifth Division, Wm. B. March vice John Eliard; Sixth Division, Conklin Smith vice John Dodge, resigned; transferred to Fifth Division; Seventh Division, Lieutenant-Colonel Geo. R. Lincoln, Jr., vice Adam T. Dodge; Eighth Division, Captain Edw. C. Parkinson vice Robt. Ure; Tenth Division—Geo. W. Brown, vice Anthony Elmendorf; Legacies and Successions, Colonel Edward R. Lansing, vice Brewster Wood; Richard McLean, additional Assistant Assessor for tobacco and cigars; Robert J. Wildes, additional Assistant Assessor for distilled spirits; Captain Maurice Fitzharris, vice Patrick J. Gleason; Hugh McDonnel, as gauger, vice B. F. Middleton, and David Edwards, gauger, vice M. L. Seazy.

TEXAS POLITICS.

It was stated some days ago that in the late Texas Convention, which nominated General DAVIS for Governor, only seventeen counties of the 130 in the State were represented. An examination of the official proceedings show that all the counties except nine were represented. It is asserted by parties from that State that DAVIS will probably beat HAMILTON for Governor.

PERSONAL.

President GRANT has returned. Representative NORMAN B. JUDD arrived here this evening from Chicago. Ex-Secretary MCCULLOCH is back from the West. HAMILTON WARD is in town. Secretary BOUTWELL will be here on Wednesday.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Monday, June 21.

FURTHER PURCHASE OF BONDS.

After the close of the present fiscal year, June 30, and until further notice, instead of weekly purchases of bonds and sales of gold, the Secretary of the Treasury will purchase $1,000,000 of bonds on alternate weeks, commencing Thursday, July 1, and will sell $1,000,000 of gold on alternate weeks, commencing Thursday, July 8. The Assistant Treasurer at New-York has been instructed accordingly.

TRADE WITH CANADA.

On the 19th inst. Secretary FISH addressed an official letter to the British Minister, informing him of the action of the House of Representatives, at the last session, recommending the renewal of negotiations for arrangement of trade with Canada, and inviting Mr. THORNTON'S cooperation with a view to the negotiation of a convention covering the interchange of products, free navigation of the St. Lawrence, freedom of the gulf and inshore fisheries, and such other matters as may be embraced in the general subject of trade relations between the United States and Canada. The British Government has given the Canadian authorities the practical control of these subjects, so far as they are concerned, and it is expected that Canadian Commissioners will arrive here immediately to confer with and assist the British Minister in the consideration of the proposed Convention.

COLORED JURORS.

To-day, Judge FULLER, pres

of the week, their new element will be represented among the white jurors.

DOUGLASS.

It is generally admitted that DOUGLASS, the colored compositor, will continue at the Government printing office irrespective of any society action. To-day three compositors resigned. One of them, a cripple, declared that he would not work with a negro. Another compositor was discharged.

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $1,022,000.

NAVY.

Lieutenant-Commander Thomas H. Stevens has been detached from the command of the Pawtuxet and placed on waiting orders. The following have also been detached from the Pawtuxet and placed on waiting orders: Lieutenant-Commander Frederick J. Nicholson, Lieutenant Thomas Nelson, Ensign George G. Clay, Midshipmen E. F. Drake, J. S. Hill, A. J. Parsons and William C. Strong.

Assistant-Surgeon J. C. Ayres and First Assistant Engineer Henry W. Finch have been ordered to special duty at New-York, and Assistant-Surgeon Dwight Dickenson to the Naval Hospital at Chelsea, Mass.

VASSAR COLLEGE.

Baccalaureate Sermon by President Raymond—The Commencement Exercises—Preparations for Departure by the Lady Students.

From Our Own Correspondent.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Monday, June 21, 1869.

The city is fast filling up with the parents and friends of the students of Vassar College who intend being present at the Commencement exercises. The Baccalaureate Sermon was preached on Sunday afternoon by President RAYMOND, and was much admired. During his charge to the graduating class the most profound feeling was exhibited, and many tears were shed by the young ladies. To-day there has been an examination of students in the riding school, and a musical serée at 8 o'clock. The musical exercises at the latter consisted of selections from the works of MENDELSSOHN, MEYERBEER, BEETHOVEN, HAYDN, WEBER, &c.; the principal vocal and instrumental performers being Misses Finch, Crane, A. Endress, Demarest, Comstock, Hatt, Avery, Devoll, Woods, Bushmore, Merrick, Ridley and Sweitzer. The last-named young lady performed with remarkable power the beautiful "Troisieme Ballad," of CHOPIN.

To-morrow the examinations in music and calisthenics will be had in the morning, with class day exercises in the afternoon; and the address before the Philalethean Society in the evening. On Wednesday will be the Commencement proper.

The young ladies of the College are to-day busy packing their trunks in order that all shall be in readiness on Wednesday for their departure. To avoid delay at the depot and steamboat landing agents are at the College authorized to sell tickets to any part of the United States on boats or cars, and for sleeping and drawing-room cars. A very large influx of visitors is expected to-night and to-morrow, and hotel keepers are alive to the situation.

The weather has been fine; and the road to the College very dusty; but there seems a probability that rain is coming, of which a moderate amount would greatly conduce to the general comfort.

Great complaints are made of the conduct of the hackmen; rendered arrogant by the influx of visitors and the consequent profits to themselves, they have become insolent to the last degree. Their conduct at the depot, on the arrival of trains, is unbearably insolent.

Energetic MATTHEW VASSAR is everywhere, and transacts the fatiguing business of Commencement with such rapidity and force as to infuse vigor into all. The examination of the students of the riding school this afternoon was not largely attended, but was, nevertheless, very entertaining, the young ladies composing the class showing much grace and skill in their management of the horses.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theatrical and Musical.

FIFTH-AVENUE THEATRE.

An excellent dramatic and burlesque company, mainly composed of delegates from Selwyn's Boston Theatre, appeared last evening for the first time at this theatre in an entertainment of much merit, but unfortunately of excessive length. The performance did not close until nearly 12 o'clock—too late an hour to allow of any extended notice at this moment. CHARLES READE's exquisite drama, "Dora," and BURNAND's travestie of "Black-eyed Susan," constituted the opening programme, and both pieces were received with a cordiality that argues happily for the success of the enterprise. The extravagance, especially, excited the heartiest and most genuine applause that has been bestowed upon any similar representation within our memory. Such burlesque as these Boston ladies and gentlemen show us is not only tolerable, but is in a high degree enjoyable. There is more drollery, more grotesque fancy, more real humorous meaning in it than in all the other exhibitions of this class that have been given in New-York this season put together. The principal characters are sustained by Mr. STUART ROBSON, a master of his craft; Miss MARY CARY, a lithe, lively and gentle little soubrette; Miss KITTY BLANCHARD, a dashing and, let us not omit to mention, a decorous prudement in all nimble-footed and dexterous vocal artifices; Mr. H. PEARSON, an old New-York favorite, and Mr. H. JOSEPHS, a very acceptable new-comer. Of the interpretation of "Dora" we shall take another opportunity to speak. The same programme will be repeated every evening this week and on Saturday afternoon.

MISCELLANEOUS MENTION.

The concert by which the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hoboken is to benefit, occurs at Steinway Hall this evening. The Berge Coral Union, unassisted, and under the direction of Dr. WM. BERGE will interpret the programme....Miss OLIVE LOGAN and Professor L. A. LEGRAND give a reading in relation to "Woman's Rights" at Dodworth Hall, this evening....Messrs. BACHUS, WAMBOLD and BERNARD, and also Miss KATE NEWTON, will be among the passengers by the Cunard steamer sailing to-morrow. Mr. MARK SMITH and lady and Miss EMILY THORNE depart for Europe Saturday.

The Strike of the Pennsylvania Coal Miners.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, June 21.

There is a good deal of misapprehension on this subject in the public mind, which is the fault of a portion of the coal operators in the Schuylkill region, and some of their agents in this city. It is generally understood that the "strike" is wholly a matter of collusion between the strikers and the coal operators for the sole purpose of putting up the price of coal. This is true of a part of the operators only in one of the coal regions, the great majority of the operators having been opposed to the movement from the beginning, and both they and their men are now and always have been willing to continue their work, but they are overawed and prevented by a powerful secret organization. The operative miners and laborers are also divided in sentiment, just as the employing operators are. A very large proportion of these have been all the time willing to work, but are terrorized by the secret organization. In addition to these elements of disturbance and conflict in the coal region, there is an organized band of outlaws known as "Buckshots," who do not belong to the Union of miners and other operatives, as we understand it, but who take advantage of "strikes" and other periods of disturbance to go about the coal regions, maltreating, robbing, murdering and committing all kinds of outrage, out of revenge against particular individuals who have incurred their enmity. They are believed to be composed of worthless characters who have been discharged from various collieries for misconduct, or because they were "bad hands." This brief statement will give a general idea of the underlying causes of the existing difficulty in the coal regions.

It requires a further statement, however, to explain the lamentable condition of affairs in some parts of the coal region. It will be remembered that about a week ago, news was telegraphed to the city that CHARLES HENDERSON, a superintendent in the employment of the Buck Mountain Company, was surrounded in his lodging by a mob and beaten and stabbed almost to death. We have before us a private letter from the scene of the outrage, which shows it to have been as unprovoked and brutal a riot as ever was perpetrated. The mob was composed of about seventy-five men, strangers to the neighborhood, who surrounded the house in the night-time, broke down the door, took possession of two friends of HENDERSON and pushed them up the stairs as a sort of breastwork to prevent HENDERSON from firing on his assailants, and then beat HENDERSON in the bludgeon, cut him with their knives, and jumped on his almost lifeless body until it lost all resemblance to humanity, and all trace in presence of HENDERSON'S wife. This man's sole supposed offence is that he is the superintendent of the colliery, and had in the exercise of his duty discharged a number of worthless hands, and the brutal and murderous attack upon him was solely a matter of revenge. It is thus singular, that, just as we are called on as an example to show the conditions of affairs in the mining regions, for we have well authenticated accounts of other and similar outrages. These outlaws waylay and maltreat and murder the employers and employed alike whenever either do anything contrary to the will or the liking of the conspirators.

To such an extent is this terrorism carried, (of which the foregoing arrogyres,) that collieries, where the employers and miners have settled upon terms for future operations, are prevented from going to work and cannot proceed until they have organized and armed a protective force for the defence of themselves and their men. In one case a Company in the Lehigh region, in default of the protection that should be extended by the law, and by the State and local authorities, have sent up large quantities of arms and ammunition, and have organized, at their own expense, a numerous police force for the defence of their property and their workmen. It is marvellous that, in counties where so much depends on order and the steady and regular run of industry, such a condition of affairs should be permitted to exist. The Lehigh iron region is one of the greatest seats of iron manufacture on this continent, but it is dependent on the collieries for its regular and sufficient supply of coal, without which it cannot continue its operations. Why is it that the county authorities there fail to give protection to the operators and miners who are willing to work? If they are powerless, how is it that the State Executive does not exercise the authority vested in him for just such emergencies? Now that it is known that a large proportion of the operators are not in any plot to raise the price of coal, and that large numbers of the miners who had been forced into the suspension of work, are ready and willing to resume, it is incumbent upon both the local and State authorities to see to it that no system of "terrorism" shall prevent industrious, willing and orderly men from doing their work.

BRAZIL.

The Suspension of Negotiations with the United States—Extracts from the Correspondence.

By the arrival at this port of the steamship Merrimack, the official correspondence between Minister JAMES WATSON WEBB and the Brazilian Government—a correspondence resulting in a suspension of negotiations and a demand of passports by the Minister—is at hand. From the journals secured by courtesy of the Purser of the Merrimack, a brief summary of affairs published in yesterday's TIMES was taken. The following is a more extended account of the matter:

On Oct. 15, 1866, the American whaleship Canada got ashore on the Garoes Reef, near the mouth of the Rio Grande del Norte, and was taken possession of by a party of Brazilian soldiers, who allege that their assistance was asked for by the Captain. He, as well as the crew, asserted on oath that the vessel was seized despite their remonstrances, and after she had got afloat and was out of danger. At any rate, her cargo, &c., were sold and the proceeds deposited in the Brazilian Treasury at Pernambuco during 1867. Reclamation was made in January, 1867, and finally rejected by Councillor PARANHOS in the same year, who was then, as he is now, Minister of Foreign Affairs, charging the Captain of the Canada, his three mates and twenty-two seamen, who were to the facts, with perjury and deliberate barratry. The great rebellion being over, Mr. SEWARD, the Secretary of State of the United States, on the 17th of July, 1868, ordered the United States Minister at this Court to renew the reclamation in the case of the Canada, amounting at the time of interest to about $60,000, and in his instructions said: "Under these circumstances, you will renew an application in this case. You will say that this Government hold that the Brazilian authorities had no right to interfere, and that there is not considered to be any proof worthy of belief, and which ought to have weight, against the crew. On the contrary, we must believe that their interference was intrusive, unnecessary, and for the purpose of obtaining possession of the property."

The Minister placed that order in the hands of the Foreign Secretary of Brazil on the 1st of August, and on the 1st of November, 1868, when it was presumed this Government had had time to make the necessary examination, he made his formal reclamation. During the next ten months the claim was discussed with four different Ministers of Foreign Affairs, the last, Senor PARANHOS, being the same gentleman who had rejected it in 1867, and charged all the witnesses with deliberate perjury. Pending the discussion with Senor PARANHOS, he, without giving any notice of his intentions to the American Minister here, addressed the Brazilian Minister in Washington to ask Mr. SEWARD for a reexamination of the Canada claim, with a view to a change of his instructions to the American Minister here, and at the same time had placed before the American Secretary of State his portion of the correspondence, well knowing that General WEBB was under a pledge not to forward his until the negotiation was closed. Mr. SEWARD promptly promised in a note to the Brazilian Minister in Washington that the reexamination of the Canada claim should be made. His note was forwarded to the Foreign Office here, and on this promise unauthoritatively obtained, Senor PARANHOS suspended the negotiations. A very serious difficulty ensued between General WEBB and Senor PARANHOS, in which General WEBB complained of ungentlemanly treatment.

It appears that Mr. SEWARD made the desired reexamination, and after consulting with the interested parties to find out the minimum of damages which the claimant would accept, directed Mr. WEBB to propose the payment of $70,000 in full satisfaction. This was done. On the 2d of April the Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs addressed a letter (not published) to Mr. WEBB, in which, evidently referring to something already said, he remarks:

"It is true that General WEBB transcribes in his note a dispatch of the 2d of January of the current year, in which Mr. SEWARD, the Secretary of State, directs him to propose the present compromise; but it is also certain that that dispatch does not respond to the solicitation made."

In a letter addressed by Mr. WEBB to the British Minister at Rio de Janeiro, explaining the reason for his suspending diplomatic relations, Mr. WEBB stated that at the time the last communication referred to was received he was sick in bed. He had for some days previous desired an interview with Baron DE COTEGIPE, and on the 24th of April his Secretary of Legation, "Hon. W. V. V. LINGOWSON, succeeded in getting access to the Minister," who informed him, to use Mr. WEBB's language, that "he could not and would not entertain the proposition for compromise submitted by the Government of the United States, because the Brazilian Minister in Washington had not advised the Government of Brazil that the matter has again been referred to this Legation." In reply to this statement, Mr. WEBB directed his Secretary to inform Baron DE COTEGIPE by letter "of the absolute certainty that a perseverance in this most offensive proceeding . . . must and would result in a suspension of all diplomatic intercourse between the two countries, and a demand for my passport." On the 27th of April this letter was placed in the hands of the Foreign Minister, and on the 1st of May was replied to, and in which reply the Baron said:

"The Canada question having arrived at such a point here at this Court, where it would be very difficult of solution, the Government of his Majesty, as General WEBB is aware, adopted the alternative of inviting the American Government to reconsider the points of the case, in view of the documents which illustrated it. This alternative, authorized by international custom, was a demonstration of good faith, &c., &c."

"The American Government responded, as was natural to this amicable proceeding, and promised the Brazilian Minister that the case of the Canada should be reconsidered. The question being at this point, (that is, we have no knowledge of Mr. SEWARD's promise having been redeemed, because we repudiate as spurious what General WEBB presents as his official instructions,) the undersigned cannot pronounce either negatively or affirmatively upon the proposition made to him. To act otherwise would be equivalent on the part of the Imperial Government to undoing what itself had considered as necessary to do; and would also be an admission that the Government of the United States, having engaged to reconsider the claim, could waive the necessity of advising the Brazilian Minister of its having done so, without offending the just susceptibilities of that Minister and of the Imperial Government. When the Imperial Government brought its Minister addressed itself to that of the United States, it did not wish to be wanting in the consideration which General WEBB merits. The American Government not having announced to the Brazilian Minister in Washington the result of the promised reconsideration, nor of the issue of renewed and modified instructions to General WEBB, keeps the Government of his Majesty in the same state of expectation it was before, and from which it cannot depart, except in such manner as shall leave full responsibility for the respect due to our Minister and from one to the other."

Other letters followed until May 8, when the subject of a suspension of relations was thus referred to:

"So long as there existed the slightest hope of inducing this Government to forego its contemplated repudiation of the undersigned's instructions, he labored zealously with your Excellency to persuade it to reject the compromise proposed, on other and higher grounds than chance offensively assumed. These labors have proved unavailing, and he has no alternative but to accept the emergency so persistently forced upon him; and justice to his Government and people and a proper self-respect require him to determine that, until your Excellency's decision in relation to the character of his instructions is formally revoked, he cannot transact further business with the Government of Brazil."

On May 10, Minister WEBB formally suspended negotiations by the following epistle:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
RIO DE JANEIRO, May 10, 1868.

The undersigned, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States, has the honor to remind His Excellency the Baron DE COTEGIPE, Counsellor to His Majesty the Emperor, Minister and Secretary of State for Marine, in charge of the interim of the Department of Foreign Affairs, that his note of the 1st instant remains unanswered.

In that note the undersigned expressly renounced the hope of inducing this Government to forego its contemplated repudiation of the undersigned's instructions, he labored zealously with your Excellency to persuade it to reject the compromise proposed, on other and higher grounds than chance offensively assumed. These labors have proved unavailing, and he has no alternative but to accept the emergency so persistently forced upon him; and justice to his Government and people and a proper self-respect require him to determine that, until your Excellency's decision in relation to the character of his instructions is formally revoked, he cannot transact further business with the Government of Brazil."

To-day will be quite a festive one. The grand sale of Hamilton Park property, located at New-Brighton, S. I., will be made by Messrs. A. J. BLEECKER, SON & Co., at 12:30 o'clock P. M. It will be one of the most important and attractive sales of the season. The property has been so fully described in this column that our readers must be quite familiar with its beauties and advantages. A boat for the excursionists will leave Pier No. 10 North River, foot of Dey-street, at 10:30 A. M. Free tickets, maps and particulars may be had at the auctioneers' offices, No. 17 Cedar-street. Special arrangements have been made for the comfort and convenience of the ladies, and all wives, mothers and sisters who are interested in the purchase of a suburban home are earnestly invited to attend. The sail down the bay cannot be other than delightful—a fine band of music has been engaged, an excellent lunch ordered, and no effort spared to make the trip an enjoyable one. In return for all these pleasures the guests cannot do other than bid well, and the strong probabilities are that the sale will be a particularly successful one. Proper precautions will be taken that no disreputable persons attend; any of that class who think of going may as well give up the idea, for the attempt will certainly end in a complete failure. If the day is stormy the sale will be postponed until the first clear day thereafter.

At Cranford, N. J., Messrs. A. D. MELLICK, Jr., & BRO. will sell one hundred choice lots. They are handsomely located, convenient to the City, and in many ways very desirable. The previous sales held at this place have shown very good results, and it is fair to believe that this also will be a success. A special train will leave the foot of Liberty-street at 11 A. M. Lunch will be served on the arrival of the train. Free tickets, maps and particulars may be had at the auctioneers' office, No. 26 Pine-street.

At Metuchen, N. J., Messrs. PETIT & FRAZEE have a sale of a modern residence, ten rooms, stable, &c., and two acres of choice land; also two-story cottage house and 1 60-100 acres. Train leaves foot Cortlandt-street, New-York, at 1 o'clock, returning after sale. No postponement on account of weather. Particulars at office of auctioneers, No. 171 Broadway, room No. 2.

To-morrow the great sale of 100 villa plots will be made, and the old-fashioned Rhode Island clam-bake will be served up at Islip, L. I. The great popularity of this part of the island is thoroughly proven by the fact that already the auctioneers have given out as many tickets as they care to issue. There may be one or two left, but it is doubtful. If there are any to be had, they may be found at the office of Messrs. JOHNSON & MILLER, auctioneers, No. 28 Nassau-street.

The same day, on Orange Mountain, N. J., Messrs. E. LUDLOW & Co., will sell eight elegant building sites of five acres each, beautifully located on the Turnpike, Northfield-road, Gregory and Mountain avenues, located between the residences of A. P. PILLOT, Mrs. CHARLES A. HECKSCHER, and those of General MARCEY, Dr. MARCEY, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. HECKER and others. These plots are unexcelled in convenience of location, beauty of prospect and salubrity of climate by any property the same distance from the City, viz., twelve miles. Maps and terms at the office of the auctioneers, No. 8 Pine-street, New-York.

The same day, at Dunellen, N. J., Mr. L. E. WOOD will sell 200 very desirable building plots, 50x150 feet each, and two new dwellings. Maps, railroad passes and particulars may be had of A. D. HOPE, Esq., General Agent Central New-Jersey Land Improvement Company, No. 119 Liberty-street, New-York.

At the Exchange Salesroom to-day, the attraction will be the sale of the Oloff Park property, situated in Westchester County, adjoining Jerome Park. The land has been in the Van Cortlandt family for over two hundred years. The elevated portions, constituting the larger part of the Park, are extremely picturesque, affording extensive views of the surrounding country, and adjacent parts of the City of New-York. Much of the elevated portion is beautifully wooded, and has fine streams of clear water, fed by springs and suitable for trout ponds. The plots, containing from one to thirty city lots, will be sold by the lot without reserve.

PROPOSALS.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED at the office of the Clerk of the Board of Education, 146 Grand-st., until noon of the 28th inst., for supplying the Public Schools of the City of New-York, during the ensuing year, with one thousand (1,000) tons of pine wood, more or less.

The coal must be of the best quality of white ash, for furnace and stove sizes, in good order, two thousand (two hundred and twenty-four) pounds to the ton, and must be delivered in the cellars of the several school buildings. The proposals must state the mines from which it is proposed to supply the coal, (to be furnished from the mines named,) if accepted, and must state the price per ton of two thousand two hundred and forty (2,240) pounds.

The quantities of the various sizes of coal required will be about as follows, viz.: Four thousand tons of furnace size, twelve hundred tons of stove size, seven hundred and twenty-five tons of egg size and seventy-five tons of nut size.

The oak wood must be of the best quality, the sticks not longer than three (3) feet in length, and not less than three (3) inches in diameter.

The pine wood must be of the best quality, not less than three (3) feet six (6) inches long.

The proposal must be for a price per cord of one hundred and twenty-eight (128) cubic feet, solid measure, for both pine and oak wood, and also the price per cord for sawing and splitting per load, the quantity of each wood to be split only as required by the Committee on Supplies.

The wood will be inspected and measured under the supervision of the Inspector of Fuel of the Board of Education, and must be delivered at the schools, when ordered, as follows:

Two-thirds of the quantity required from the first day of July to the twenty-fifth day of August, and the remainder as required by the Committee on Supplies.

Coal, wood, both oak and pine, must be delivered, stored, when required, split and cut, and be piled in the yards, cellars, vaults or bins of the school buildings as may be designated by the proper authority. The contracts for supplying said coal and wood to the buildings until the 25th day of June, 1870, will be ready for the faithful performance of the contract will be required, and each proposal must be accompanied with the signatures and residences of the parties interested. No compensation will be allowed for delivering said coal and wood at any of the schools, nor for piling and piling the same in the yards, cellars, vaults or bins of said schools.

Proposals must be directed to the "Committee on Supplies of the Board of Education," and should be indorsed "Proposals for Coal," or "Proposals for Wood," as the case may be.

The Committee reserve the right to reject any or all of the proposals offered.

TIMOTHY BRENNAN,
THOMAS MURPHY,
SAMUEL S. LEWIS,
Committee on Supplies.

PROPOSALS FOR $2,767,000.—TAX RELIEF BONDS OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.

Sealed proposals will be received at the Comptroller's office, until TUESDAY, June 29, 1869, at 1 o'clock P. M., at which time and place the same will be publicly opened, for the whole or any part of the Tax Relief Bonds of the City of New-York, authorized by Sec. 2 of Chap. 876, Laws of 1869.

The "Tax Relief Fund Bonds, No. 5," of the City of New-York, authorized by Sec. 2 of Chap. 876, Laws of 1869, will be issued in payment, on account of any taxes or assessments, or any portion thereof, which shall be paid to the Chamberlain of the City of New-York, which may be accepted; and in such cases the adjustment will be made at this office and the new bonds issued.

On receipt by the Comptroller the receipts of the Chamberlain for deposits made with him on account of the aforesaid land, the parties will be entitled to receive bonds for equal amounts of the par value of the bonds issued to them, bearing interest from the date of payment.

The loan, without increasing the debt of the City, offers an investment to companies and individuals undivided in security and for a period of four years.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed, "Proposals for Tax Relief Bonds of the City of New-York," and inclosed in a second envelope addressed to the Comptroller.

The right is reserved, on the part of the Comptroller, to reject any or all of the bids if, in his judgment, the interests of the Corporation require it.

RICHARD B. CONOLLY, Comptroller.

City of New-York, Department of Finance, Comptroller's Office, June 19, 1869.

THE CUBAN EXPEDITION.

Seizure of the Arms of the Cuban Filibusters—The Drill-Room at the New-York Central Revealed—The Captives Lodged in Ludlow-street Jail—Benefit of the Committee for Arms, Ammunition and Uniforms.

The latest projected filibustering expedition from this City to Cuba has probably been effectually stopped by the premature arrest of some of the chief conspirators. The event took place suddenly, as an early hour last evening, and was a total surprise to one or two of the arrested parties, who appeared very much chagrined at finding themselves incarcerated in Ludlow-street Jail for the second time within a week. Six persons were captured as being connected with the Cuban movement, as follows:

Col. W. A. C. RYAN, reputed commander of the expedition.

Señor IGNATIO ALFANO, Secretary of War of the Cuban Junta.

Captain JAMES PETERS.

Captain ABRAHAM ACKERMAN, and —— SANDORS.

The arrests were made by deputies from the United States Marshal's office, acting under orders from the United States District-Attorney. It is understood that the Spanish Consul made the request for their arrest on the ground that they were about to commit a breach of the Neutrality law, having been instructed to do so by his Ministers at Washington.

Señor ALFANO was taken at No. 91 Broadway, the headquarters of the Cuban Junta. Colonel RYAN and Captain PETERS were both seized conjointly in Houston-street, the former being about to drive away in a carriage at the time. Captain ACKERMAN was found in the large granite building corner of Houston and Mott streets, known as the New-York Casino, which was hired by the organization as a drill-room and a place of rendezvous for the Cuban volunteers in this City.

The action of the authorities caused a lively bustle among the Junta leaders, who expected to get the expedition off without exciting any trouble. It is believed to have been their intention to have sailed last evening or to-day. The rumor was that they had engaged a large steamer, which was stationed in the lower Bay in readiness to convey troops to the revolutionary island, with plenty of arms and ammunition on board.

Colonel RYAN and his associates will probably be brought before one of the United States Courts this morning, when they will offer bail for their future appearance. The drill-room in Houston-street was the scene of considerable excitement at the time of the arrest. About sixty men were congregated in a lager beer saloon in the basement of the building, when the visit by the Marshal's officers was made. Nearly the entire number was enlisted in the Cuban cause and viewed the intrusion with indignation, making threatening demonstrations, and behaving in a confused and turbulent manner. They made no assault, however, although it is said that they would have done so if they resisted to have some one shouted "Pebbles," their rallying cry, in order to incite them to attempt the release of the prisoners. The building, No. 51 Houston-street, which was recently spoken of in the TIMES, in connection with the secret and exclusive Cuban movements, to the great consternation of the Hibernians, has been used for some time past as a recruiting depot. It was the central one of several of its kind in this City, the existence of which the organizers have endeavored to keep from the public. It was considered of vital importance to avoid suspicion connecting them, as recruits were frequently drilled and rationed, besides sleeping in them. The second floor of No. 636 Broadway was one of the places of this character. They have mostly been conducted by ex-army officers, who, it is believed, have united with the Cuban Junta for the purpose of making money, the latter body having made an extremely lavish display of the article. We incorrectly announced in the TIMES of Saturday last that no bounty money was paid to the volunteer privates in the expedition. It appears that they were to be paid $10 per month, or more than is received by United States regular troops, together with a bounty of $200, conditional on their achieving the independence of Cuba. Considerable money has already been distributed among the men who have been recruited, in order to impress them with the bona fide character of the movement. This is only one of numerous indications, however, showing that the Cuban sympathizers and refugees in this City are desperately in earnest in sacrificing their money to help the struggle against the Spaniards. Not long ago a speculator visited the rooms of the Cuban Junta at No. 91 Broadway, where he offered for sale three thousand of the Star Arms Company's revolvers for $8 a piece. The proposition was favorably regarded by some of the members of the Junta, but was condemned by others, among whom was Captain GIFFORD, an ex-blockade-runner, and a dark, curly-headed man, who is supposed to be Colonel RYAN. During the examination of one of the weapons, another speculator entered the room and made the offer to supply and land 60,000 stand of arms on the coast of Cuba for the insurgents. For payment he demanded the Junta should give him good security that he would be enabled to obtain his money on his return, if successful. The result of his offer was not ascertained.

YACHTING.

Fifth Annual Regatta of the Ione Yacht Club.

The fifth annual regatta of the Ione Yacht Club came off yesterday, under circumstances disheartening enough to have driven every yesel out of the race. The rays of the sun, although unable to penetrate the heavy clouds that hung overhead, still rendered the atmosphere intensely sultry. Not a breath of air was stirring to relieve the general oppressiveness.

The regatta consisted of a race between first and second-class sloops for prizes as follows: The first prize to be given to the first boat in, a trophy cup of class, consisting of a set of oars and a silver service, valued at $100. Second prize to be given to the first boat in of the first-class yachts, a silver goblet and a miniature silver yacht, valued at $100. Third prize to be given to the first boat in of the second class, a silver tomahawk, valued at $50. Commodore PHILIP MALONE hoisted his pennant at the peak of the Unknown. The Regatta Committee, to whom were intrusted all the arrangements for the race, were WILLIAM H. CORNET, ALFRED MOORE, J. H. HAVENS, JR., CHARLES BOCKHORN and J. ALFRED LUCKEY. EDWARD SKIDMORE was appointed Judge and Starter. The yachts entered were as follows:

First Class.

Name of Boat.	Commander.	Length of Boat. Ft.	Foot of Canvas.
Breezy	Rear Com. J. Al. fred Lockey	28	850
Willie (20 tons)	W. H. Cornet	28½	1,200
J. Van Vliet	M. B. Murphy	24½	600
Unknown	J. Cornet	22	500

Second Class.

Fawn	Vice-Com. Alfred Moore	22	450
Restless (cat rig)	J. McKenna	18½	300
Thetis	J. H. Havens, Jr.	18½	300
Jersey Dutchman	A. K. Rich	18½	250
Flirt	Wm. Brown	18½	300

The allowance made for canvas was the same as is allowed by the rules of the Brooklyn Yacht Club. The course over which they ran was estimated at twenty-one miles. About 12 o'clock the boats commenced getting to the anchorage ground, preparatory to starting. When the Willie and Fawn drew out of the race, leaving the result to the remaining seven. At 12:30 o'clock Mr. SKIDMORE gave the signal to start, and, in another moment, the anchors were dragged in over the bows and the boats were shooting off down stream like so many logs of wood. Not a breath of air stirred until, when opposite the foot of Thirtieth-street, a capful came along, and for a few minutes it appeared as though there would be a race. The men revived, the sheets were hauled hard aft, and everything was done that would tend to make the canvas draw; but, in a few minutes, this calapse died away, and they were floating as before. This state of things continued until when off Bedloe's Island, the long-looked for and much-wished for wind was caught, and from that moment the race commenced.

The little craft flew swiftly over the homeward-bound track. They had the tide in their favor going out and coming. At 3:01 P. M. the Unknown, having covered all the ground required, quickly dropped anchor in front of the club-house and claimed the first prize. The Dutchman came next at 3:07, then the Van Vliet at 3:09; the Breezy at 3:15, and the Restless at 3:20. The others came dropping in one by one, between that time and dark, and soon all the little craft were resting quietly in front of the club-house.

The first prize was awarded to the Unknown, although Mr. RICH claims that, according to the rules allowing for canvas, he took her with the Dutchman. He agreed, however, to be content for the present with the second prize, and the Restless took the third.

An Old Swindle.

HERMAN REUBERT and CHARLES HEIDEMAN were arrested yesterday by Officers KING and HAWTHORN, of the Twenty-fifth Precinct, on a charge of swindling JOSEPHINE MOLZ, of No. 338 West Thirtieth-street. It appears that these men are street peddlers and called on the complainant a few days ago and induced her to loan them fifty on some goods, a portion of which they exhibited, so as to mislead her, believe that the entire lot was worth fully $600. Soon after the loan had been made, Mrs. MOLZ discovered that the package of goods left with her as security had only been "sampled," and consisted of very inferior kinds of merchandise. When the prisoners were arraigned before Inspector DILKE, at the Central Office, he recognized them as having been arrested once or twice before on similar complaints. The Inspector rather startled the accused by his reminiscences, and at the same time surprised the complainant by informing her that she deserved to lose the money in the transaction as she had no doubt believed that she was doing a good stroke of business. The prisoners were given the alternative of going before a Magistrate or refunding the money obtained by them. They accepted the latter course, and succeeded in furnishing this, with a promise of redeeming the goods by a payment of the balance. Both men were then sent before Alderman COMAN, at the Tombs, where they were discharged at the request of the complainant.

THE ALDERMANIC QUARREL.

The Vesey vs. Cullkin—Mayor Hall Requests Outside the Board to Decay the Authority of the Supreme Court—Mr. Mc Vesey to be Declared His Seat.

The Board of Assistant Aldermen met at 3 P. M. yesterday, Mr. MONAGHAN in the chair.

Mr. FISKINNEY said that he had been informed that the order of the Supreme Court, directing that Mr. MCVEANY, (Rep.) be allowed a seat in the Board in place of Mr. CULKIN, (Dem.) had been served on the Clerk of the Board and he hoped the same would be read.

Mr. MCVEANY said he appeared to claim his seat in the Board as a representative of the Ninth Assembly District.

The President said that the claim must be put in writing.

The following message from the Mayor was then read:

MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, June 21, 1869.

To the Board of Assistant Aldermen:

By the charter it is my duty to recommend any measures connected with the improvement of the City Government, and the matter now submitted is within that scope.

I have just inspected an original judgment of the Supreme Court, entered by order of the Hon. JOSEPH MULLIN, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the Fifth Judicial District, adjudging that JAMES E. MCVEANY is entitled to the seat of Assistant Aldermen of the Ninth Assembly District, and that PETER CULKIN, the sitting member, is not entitled to such office. I am reliably informed that at your meeting to-day, armed with such judgment, Mr. MCVEANY will claim the seat.

This is the first time that I have heard of a Court undertaking to interfere with the right of a legislative body to judge of the election and returns of its own members in this country, although under the charter of 1830 the Supreme Court once passed upon qualifications. But the charter of 1857 provided that each Board of the Common Council shall be the judge of the election and returns as well as of the qualifications of its own members. This phrase "of election returns" was then for the first time in our charter history borrowed verbatim from the Constitution of the United States and of this State, and the phrase has always been properly construed to mean that only legislative bodies shall judge of the matter embraced by these words of power. It is your duty, of course, to respect any judgment of a Court. But it is also your duty out of self-respect and from a regard to the law of this City organizing your own body, to maintain its rights and privileges. The Board of Assistant Aldermen is now in place of the Board referred to in the charter of 1857. I have, therefore, to recommend that if Mr. MCVEANY shall present himself under the judgment of the Court you treat it in the nature of a contested claim, and that you refer the claim, whatever it may be, to a special committee, and cause to be cited before that Committee the said claimant and Mr. CULKIN and take the proper action to determine who is the rightful member. A. OAKEY HALL, Mayor.

The order of the Supreme Court referred to in the message was also read.

Mr. GIBBEY then offered a resolution that the message of the Mayor and the claim of Mr. MCVEANY to a seat in the Board be referred to a special committee; which was adopted, and the following gentlemen were appointed members of the committee: Messrs. GIBBEY, (Dem.,) REILLY, (Dem.,) CREGIER, (Rep.)

After the transaction of some routine business, the Board adjourned.

Plot to Break Hudson County Jail.

On Sunday afternoon, Mr. JONES, the Jailor of the Hudson County Jail, discovered a plot among the prisoners to break jail, and in effecting their object to use the most desperate means. For some time past Mr. JONES, from various suspicious actions on the part of several of the inmates, thought that such an attempt might be made; but had no idea of the gigantic plans in preparation. With great caution the prisoners were watched day and night, and while they were out of their cells during various times, careful search was made for any evidence of the suspected plot. Nothing, however, could be discovered. On Sunday Mr. JONES determined to give them an opportunity to show their hand; and, as if perfectly unsuspicious, allowed them out of their cells at suppper, and the free use of the corridor. They were strictly watched, however. Mr. JONES first noticed WILSON, (the notorious English pickpocket, who was recently sentenced to five years imprisonment for picking a lady's pocket in Jersey City,) walking toward the iron gate carrying something under his coat which looked like a gun. Mr. JONES then went for assistance, and returning followed WILSON into his cell, and there before he could make away with the implement found a piece of iron about four feet in length somewhat resembling a burglar's jimmy. Knives and picklocks were also found; several of the prisoners were implicated from the fact of weapons being found upon them. They were at once locked up, and yesterday morning were removed to Trenton. Had their designs not been discovered, there is no doubt that the men would have escaped, as they were well armed and could have easily forced their way through the gate when the jailor or his assistant opened it. The men are all desperate characters, and would not have desisted from their purpose, though it might entail the loss of human life. It is thought that the implements found were passed into the jail by way of the hospital.

New-York Harmonic Society.

A meeting of this flourishing organization was held last evening at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, corner of Twenty-third-street and Fourth-avenue.

At 8 P. M. Dr. W. B. EAGER took the chair, and called the assembly to order. He said that, in accordance with the constitution, the time had arrived to nominate officers for election next Monday, and the following gentlemen were then proposed:

President, Messrs. Brouner and R. P. Marshal; First Vice-President, Messrs. D. B. Johnston, Provost, R. P. Marshall and J. H. Todd; Second Vice-President, Messrs. W. Wild, W. Kinsely, W. T. Hubbard; Corresponding Secretary, Messrs. Mapes, R. J. Johnston, W. Scorgie, D. B. Johnston; Financial Secretary, Dr. Janes and Mr. J. A. Thomas; Treasurer, Dr. Janes and Messrs. Prevost, Hubbard, D. B. Johnston, G. N. Earle; Librarians, Messrs. Scorgie, W. Wild, Dr. Janes, J. H. Todd and Prevost; Tenor Committee, Messrs. R. J. Johnston, D. B. Johnston, G. W. Earle, Mapes, Jewett, C. R. King, H. Conant, Geo. Gurley and F. Van Sickles; Bass Committee, Messrs. J. Beltzer, Strong, J. R. Curran, Hubbard, J. King, Geo. H. Allen, W. Kinsely, Prevost, W. H. Weeks and Jarboe.

After agreeing to meet next Monday evening at Dr. CROSBY'S Church, a member present suggested that as they had forsaken the barbarous principles of their predecessors in allowing lady members to vote, he hoped that every facility and encouragement would be extended to them for that purpose, and that they would come up "to a man" and vote.

A facetious member moved that the nominations be respected and the names of lady candidates for office be received. This was carried unanimously, but the ladies nominated declined to appear on the ticket.

No further business being before the meeting, which was a cordial one in every respect, it was adjourned to the call of the Chair.

The Americus Club—Excursion to Alderney Park.

The Americus Club gave its second annual excursion to Alderney Park yesterday, leaving the pier foot of Christopher-street at 9 A. M. The Club is an association of gentlemen of the Ninth and Fifteenth Wards, and a great number of their friends rallied round them on the occasion. The respectability of the organization was a warrant for the way in which the programme of the day would be carried out, and all who were present seemed highly gratified with the arrangements which had been made for their enjoyment. After having amused themselves as well as possible the excursionists returned to the City much pleased with their day's relaxation.

The German Society for the Protection of Ignorant Litigants.

This Society, which about a week ago was temporarily organized, held a second meeting at No. 10 Stanton-street last evening, when Mr. KUHN presided, and a permanent organization was effected by the adoption of a constitution and by-laws, as prepared by a Committee previously appointed for that purpose. Immigrant runners and persons likely to swindle immigrants, are excluded from membership, and a trustee for each ward is to be appointed to take care of the interests of the Society in his district.

Additional members signed the roll, after receiving an explanation of the objects of the Society, which previously have been set forth in the TIMES.

Theft of Furs.

An examination was held yesterday by Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs Police Court, in the case of LOUIS LEVI, who has been under arrest on a charge of stealing $1,000 worth of mink skins from the wagon of F. W. SELIG, as it stood in front of No. 488 Broadway, on the 26th of April last. As the evidence showed that the accused had endeavored to sell a portion of the plunder and could not give an explanation of the manner in which he came into possession, he was accordingly held for trial.

The Alleged Malpractice Case of Dr. Armand—Action of the Coroner.

An investigation was to have been commenced yesterday by Coroner KEENAN in the case of JAMES STRAFFE, who is supposed to have died at Bellevue Hospital from the effects of potions given him by Dr. ARMAND, of No. 49 Bleecker-street. The physician then in charge of Straffe, when he was first brought to the Hospital, was Dr. Wallace and he was under the care of Dr. ARMAND. The physicians then in charge of Straffe, on his death, notified the Coroner of the case, and the Coroner was unable to proceed in the case owing to the absence of witnesses, and adjourned the examination until to-day. Dr. ARMAND is still in the custody of the Police.

Chess Tournament.

The Fourth Grand National Chess Tournament was inaugurated yesterday at Lieber's Café Europe, Nos. 13 and 14 Division-street. Among the more prominent players are the names of Eugene Delmar, Captain Mackenzie, Major Wernich, J. Mason, Frederick Perrin, Baron Paul Von Frankenberg, L. H. Hellwitz, John Meaney, George C. Helmbold, Dr. W. R. Corson of Washington, Mr. Beatigman, R. Rice, H. J. Stanley, J. Lionel, Henry Grayson, Dr. A. Knopp, Dr. J. P. Barnett, Dr. Chas. H. Lyon, J. Rubine, M. Feintrich, and many others. There have as many strong players entered the lists, and this promises to be the most interesting that has yet been contested. The following score of games had been played up to midnight last night:

Names.	Won.	Lost.	Names.	Won.	Lost.
Manning	0	1	Grayson	2	0
Delmar	0	1	Fleinmann	2	0
Mason	1	1	Schiesel	0	1
Perrin	1	1	Robinson	0	1
Von Frankenberg	2	0	Knopp	0	1
Mackenzie	1	1
Wernich	1	1	Total	22	22

The chess and reading rooms at the Hanover have been elegantly refitted and put in complete order, and from this time may be considered as the recognised headquarters of the chess world in this City. The rooms are filled every night, and as newspapers from almost every part of the world are to be found on the tables, it is no wonder that the lounger finds it a pleasant place to spend the evening.

Revival Extraordinary Lay Delegation.

At Beekman Hill Methodist Episcopal Church, East Fiftieth-street, between First and Second avenues, the congregation voted on the question of lay delegation yesterday evening. The number of votes polled was forty-one—thirty against and clan for lay delegation. The inspectors were Rev. F. BOTLOME, D. S. BURDELL and JUDSON SMITH.

At a meeting of the Twenty-seventh-street Methodist Episcopal Church voted last evening on lay representation. The whole number of votes cast was eighty-six; fifty-seven for and twenty-seven against the measure; also, two illegal votes. The election inspectors were Rev. C. H. LONG, A. W. BADEAU and CHAS. IRVING.

At the Forty-fourth-street Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday evening, fifty-nine votes were cast on the question of lay representation—thirty-seven against, and twenty-two in favor of it. Rev. A. W. WYATT and S. GREENEY were elected inspectors.

The Wilson Imbroglio.

The inquest on the body of ROBERT WILSON, who is said to have died under suspicious circumstances at Hudson City, was resumed last evening, before Coroner WHITE, of Hoboken. The evidence was to the effect that the deceased had been treated kindly by his friends in Hudson City, and that there was nothing suspicious in the manner of his death. One witness swore that deceased had told him, before his death, that he had been ill-treated by his children, and that some unpleasantness existed between himself and relatives, both sides trying to obtain possession of the old man and his money. The inquest was adjourned.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

New-York.

Yesterday afternoon, at 5:20 o'clock, the large wooden gutter on the eaves of the building No. 126 Nassau-street became filled with water by the leader getting choked up, and broke off, falling to the ground with a loud crash. A street lamp was demolished and some expensive store windows broken by the falling timber, but fortunately no person was injured.

EMMA BROWN and JOHN LYONS quarreled last evening at their residence, No. 20 Mulberry-street, when EMMA stabbed her antagonist in the cheek with a knife, inflicting slight wounds. The arrival of the Police put a stop to the affair and EMMA being arrested, was locked up in the Sixth Precinct Station-house, and will be arraigned this morning before Justice DOWLING at the Tombs Police Court.

JOHN FRIEND, while at work yesterday afternoon at No. 19 Robinson-street, had both legs badly injured by a case of copper falling on them. He was taken home.

PATRICK MAINN fell last evening in Fifth-street, near First-avenue, while under the influence of liquor, and was badly injured about the head.

PATRICK WINTERS, a laborer, had his leg fractured yesterday at No. 461 Broadway, by some earth caving in on him while at work excavating. He was removed to Bellevue Hospital.

HENRY RECTOR, of No. 67 Mangin-street, and CHARLES METZE, of No. 614 East Twelfth-street, both scavengers, were nearly suffocated yesterday in the vault of No. 29 Mulberry-street. They were, however, rescued by the Sixth Ward Police.

Brooklyn.

A German named FRANK SACHS was taken into custody yesterday by Officer FROST on a charge of burglary. The allegation is that the prisoner was implicated in the recent theft of jewelry and silverware, to the value of $1,500, from Mr. J. P. HARDING'S residence, Van Buren-street, near Bedford-avenue. He was held to answer.

The Board of Aldermen did not meet yesterday afternoon, no quorum being present.

The Floral Concert at Mr. BEECHER'S Church will be repeated this evening.

Westchester County.

The residence of GEORGE W. MCLEAN, Street Commissioner of New-York, at Glen Park, presented a scene of festivity and merry-making yesterday on the occasion of a visit of the Light Guards, of which Mr. MCLEAN is Major.

The members of the New-Rochelle Maennerchor celebrated their second anniversary in Leiber's Woods yesterday, and were presented with a beautiful new flag by the German ladies of the town.

Coroner BATHGATE held an inquest yesterday morning upon the body of an unknown man who had been found floating in the East River off Fort Morris. The deceased was about 45 years old, and from some marks on the pantaloons, it was supposed that he was accidentally drowned while trying to effect his escape from Randall's Island.

New-Jersey.

Judge WHITE, of Hoboken, issued a warrant last evening for the arrest of PAT DOHERTY of Hudson City on the charge of having attempted to criminally assault his niece, HARRIET LAWRENCE, a child aged thirteen years.

Hon. JAMES LYNCH, a well-known and highly-respected citizen of Jersey City, died yesterday at his residence. He was for two succeeding sessions a member of the State Assembly, and for many years represented the Second Ward of Jersey-City in the Board of Chosen Freeholders, and of which he held the position of Director for a long time. In politics he was a Democrat, but was respected by all parties. The Hudson County Court of Sessions adourned yesterday in consequence of Mr. LYNCH'S death.

JOHN FOX was tried before the Court of Special Sessions yesterday, on the charge of kidnapping a little girl, the daughter of Mrs. SWINDLE, a pea-nut vendor, doing business at the Jersey City Ferry. He was found guilty. Sentence deferred.

It is reported that a party of 261 men left Hoboken on Sunday for Cuba, to reinforce the insurgents.

Officer LOUIS ECKART, of the Hoboken Police, committed suicide yesterday. He walked over to Jersey City and there drowned himself near the Pavonia Ferry, having first divested himself of his coat and vest. No cause is assigned for the act. An inquest will be held on the remains Thursday evening next.
